Writing a PhD is much more than laboriously compiling the “Qualifizierungsarbeit”. It is a rite de passage during years of a human’s life, where few things are set in stone, and so much is still in flux, where the author of a hopefully sound research study is still trying to find her way in the world. Set against the backdrop of a global pandemic this makes for quite the ride.

I am profoundly grateful to have had a strong circle of support during these times that could have easily felt lonely otherwise. I have been blessed with fellow travelers on my path, both scientifically, administratively, and personally who extended a helping hand, perspective, advice, companionship, laughs, and/or countless rounds in ‘the park.’ An intellectual work of such extent cannot be achieved isolated in only one person’s mind, it is a communal project. This thesis was formed in countless conversations, fueled by the generosity, ingeniousness and comradeship of peers, supervisors, and acquaintances.

I am indebted to my supervisor, Katharina Stornig, who, always took the time to counsel me, productively challenge me, and who provided her incorruptible and pragmatic perspective on my work, and the PhD path. Thank you for sharpening my view!

Monica Rüthers, thank you for accompanying me on my way through academia. From packing 3500 conference bags for the Hamburg historians conference in 2016, to organizing and attending receptions with foreign dignitaries, to editing volumes, providing sound and unflustered research advice – thank you for your support and generosity!

Frank Golczewski, your introductory seminar on Eastern European History motivated me to change my major to history, and your perspective and wise counsel have accompanied me throughout my studies. Your “The situation remains unclear” has become canonical in my vocabulary. History in a nutshell!

I spent a happy, and deeply inspiring year at Smith College, prior to my PhD. The experience there – academia at its best! – and the people I met were formative for my decision to pursue a PhD years later. Darcy Buerkle, thank you for setting me on the path of studying the psychological rehabilitation of refugees back in 2015. Pam Petro, and Pam Thompson of the creative writing classes: Your classes literally opened worlds for me. The ways in which you supported my writing as a non-native speaker, teaching me how to ‘tell the story’ have been formative.

This project would not have been possible without the German Academic Scholarship Foundation, who I never thought would accept me in its illustrious ranks in the first place, but has funded both my studies and my PhD. Besides enabling this project, the ‘SDV’ made possible some great memories between San Francisco, Harvard University, and Rome, where I met luminous, inspiring people.

The Giessen Graduate Center for the Study of Culture at Justus-Liebig University provided the framework for the last 3,5 years. Thanks especially to Ann van de Veire for helping me navigate bureaucracy and the world of computer adapters.

I have been fortunate enough to receive research advice by leading scholars in the field over coffee, email, and zoom: Atina Grossmann, Tara Zahra, Dagmar Herzog, Silvia Salvatici, Avinoam Patt, Laura Hobson Faure, Peter Gatrell, Mathew Thomson, Nellie Thompson. Thank you for your time and generosity!

The German Displaced Persons Network provided an academic community early on. Thank you to Markus Nesselrodt, Marcus Velke, Christian Höschler, Jim Tobias, and Anna Andlauer.

To the archivists at United Nations Archives, USHMM, JDC Archives, Central Zionist Archives – thanks for providing patient orientation and guidance in the archival process, and for providing me with digitized material when the archives were closed down due to a certain global virus.

Kerstin Tina Hamann, for being my fairy godmother in life and writing. Thank you for countless hours of reading, and commenting on my material, for championing everything I do with such enthusiasm and loyalty, and for always providing the laughs! Katharina ‘KW’ Wolf, thank you for reading large parts of my work and providing excellent and unflappable feedback.

My friends for holding my hand during this arduous process, too many to name. Ruben, thanks for doing the pandemic with me, for fighting pests and heartbreak and for having me and the little people. Jennifer – thanks for many a cathartic laugh, your astuteness, and your gentle guidance towards ‘the form.’ Rebekka – we have clocked some serious mileage together, both literally and figuratively. Thank you for your loyalty, your down-to-earth perspective, your ‘holding my hand’ during the treacherous formatting process, and thanks for letting me be part of your own journey! Alisa, we found each other late in the process, but you have nevertheless become a trusted friend, with unflappable perspective, happy to be taken along with my ideas and initiations. Robert – the first among us to succeed in the PhD “mosh pit”¹ – for countless hours of shared ruminations on life’s wonders, comedies, and tragedies, and for always being just a phone call away. Simon, thank you for your wisdom and your perspective on many aspects of my life, and for sharing a penchant for the delights of life, too.

Encouragement is a tonic to the writer's soul, even after the story has been told. I have been extremely lucky to come across people who were gracious enough to gift it to me: Ece Temelkuran, thank you for understanding and seeing the "feeling" part; Cathy Mulligan, thank you for your tenacity in nudging me to think big (ger); Bert Koenders, thank you for giving me that last bit of coraggio when I needed it most.

To my 'chosen sisters' Catharina and Marie-Christine, we have done life together, literally since day 1. Thank you for always being by my side and being the luminous, wise, adventurous, and funny women that you are! Jenn for holding my hand, always with perspective, advice, or a laugh at the ready. Thank you!

Jan, Gesine, Inga – thank you for keeping up with me. My maternal grandparents, who passed in the process of my PhD years, but whose continued impact on my life is immeasurable. Opa, I am proudly carrying the torch of Dr. Frei on – as the first woman no less.

How can a girl thank her mother? Thank you for embracing my headstrongness, for giving me 'the music,' and for supporting me in all my various endeavors, for instilling a deep curiosity for all matters of life in me, and for finding even the seemingly most mundane aspects of my life interesting.

Last but by no means least I want to acknowledge Luna "Lun-Xi" and Louis "Boi Boi" Frei, my mischievous sidekicks, who I am positive will never read my work, but who brought loads of love, happiness, and levity to my life.
