

Acknowledgements

As editors, we are proud to present this volume as a genuine product of collaboration. Throughout its development, we have benefitted greatly from the support, insights, and generosity of many individuals – both personally and intellectually. This volume would not exist without them, and we are deeply grateful for their contributions, from its inception to its final form.

We extend our gratitude to our colleagues at the former Collaborative Research Centre “Law and Literature” at the University of Münster, particularly those involved in our dynamic cluster “Feminist Perspectives on Law and Literature.” Your engagement, expertise, and eagerness in sharing your time and perspectives have been invaluable. Many of the contributions in this volume originated from presentations at our 2022 conference of the same name. We wish to thank everyone who attended the conference and facilitated conversations on feminism, law and literature – conversations that have fundamentally shaped the form and content of the present volume.

To our contributors, we offer our sincerest thanks for your thoughtfulness, curiosity and, most of all, your patience. Your dedication and rigor have made this volume what it is.

We wish to acknowledge the generous support of the German Research Foundation, that made this volume and the activities of our dynamic cluster possible. Our appreciation extends to the editors for welcoming our work into the Law and Literature series. At De Gruyter, we are especially grateful to Myrto Aspioti, Stella Diedrich, and Andrea Jost for their dedication and hard work throughout the publication process.

Last, but certainly not least, we would like to thank our language editors, Cynthia Brown and Jason Fisher, and our student assistants, for their many hours of meticulous work that not only contributed to this volume but also supported the events organized by our dynamic cluster. Your efforts have been invaluable, and we deeply appreciate your commitment.
