

List of contributors

Zsolt Boda is Research Professor and General Director of the HUN-REN Centre for Social Sciences. His research interests are governance and policy studies; populism research; trust and emotions in politics.

Pierrick Chalaye is a postdoctoral researcher at the University of Pau and Adour Countries, and works on global and comparative environmental politics, cross-cultural approaches to decision-making and participatory and deliberative democratic theories and practices.

Wendy Conway-Lamb is a Researcher and PhD Candidate at the Centre for Deliberative Democracy and Global Governance, University of Canberra. Her research focuses on adaptation, inclusive climate governance, and international development in the Asia-Pacific.

Kari De Pryck is Senior Lecturer at the University of Geneva. Her research focusses on science-policy interfaces, international organisations and global environmental politics.

Stephen Elstub is Professor of Democratic Politics at the School of Geography, Politics, and Sociology, Newcastle University. He is a Fellow of the Tyndall Centre and Chair of the European Consortium for Political Research's Democratic Innovations Standing Group.

Oliver Escobar is Professor of Public Policy and Democratic Innovation at the School of Social and Political Sciences of the University of Edinburgh. He co-directed What Works Scotland and combines research and practice across policy and community contexts.

Dannica Fleuss is Senior Lecturer at Heidelberg University, Visiting Professor in political philosophy at the University of Nairobi, and Research Associate at the Centre for Deliberative Democracy and Global Governance, University of Canberra.

Maxime Gaborit is a PhD student in political sciences at Sciences Po Paris and UCLouvain – Saint-Louis – Bruxelles. His research focuses on climate activism and democracy.

Laurent Jeanpierre is Professor in the Department of Political Science at the University of Paris 1 Panthéon Sorbonne. His current work focuses on ecological real utopias and post-growth politics.

Ruth Lightbody is a Senior Lecturer in Politics at Glasgow Caledonian University. Her research focuses on how deliberative democracy can implement policy changes which tackle social inequalities and environmental issues.

Azucena Morán is a Research Associate at the Research Institute for Sustainability at GFZ and a PhD candidate at the European University Institute (EUI).

Daniel Oppold is working for the Agency for Citizen Participation of the German state of Baden-Wuerttemberg. He is a political scientist and worked at the Research Institute for Sustainability at GFZ until February 2024.

Daniel Oross is Senior Research Fellow at the HUN-REN Centre for Social Sciences. He is Head of the Research Department for Political Behavior. His research interests are political participation, youth policy, political socialisation and democratic innovations.

Janosch Pfeffer is a PhD researcher at the Institute of Sustainability Governance, Leuphana University Lüneburg.

Marco Reggiani is a Research Associate in the Department of Civil and Environmental Engineering at the University of Strathclyde. His research focuses on planning, urban development, and equity, diversity, and inclusion in STEM and Higher Education.

Stefanie Reher is Reader in Political Science in the Department of Government & Public Policy at the University of Strathclyde. Her research focuses on political representation, public opinion, and disability and politics.

Jennifer J. Roberts is Senior Lecturer in Civil and Environmental Engineering at the University of Strathclyde, and Deputy Director of the Strathclyde Institute for Sustainable Communities. Her research focuses on decision making in transition to net zero carbon societies.

Romane Rozencwajg is a PhD in political sciences at the Paris 8 University. Her research focuses on prefigurative politics, ecology and democracy.

Hannah Salamon is a Research Associate at the Centre for Public Policy at the University of Glasgow. Her research focuses on the role of women and gender in climate change policies, processes, and outcomes.

Emerson M. Sanchez is a Research Fellow at the Australian National University's Crawford School of Public Policy. He researches social risk, environmental and natural resource politics, and deliberative democracy.

Novieta H. Sari is a postdoctoral research associate in applied social science at the School of Natural and Environmental Sciences, Centre for Rural Economy, Newcastle University. She works on citizen science, participatory governance, and risk communication on climate.

Dirk von Schneidemesser is a social and political scientist at the Research Institute for Sustainability at GFZ. His research interests are urban sustainability transformations, citizen participation, and local democratic processes.

Dorota Stasiak leads the Research Group Co-creation in Democratic Practice at the Research Institute for Sustainability at GFZ. She is interested in the science, arts and crafts of collaboration.

Jane Suiter is a Professor of Political Communication at the School of Communications, Dublin City University. She directs DCU's Institute for Future Media, Democracy and Society and works on citizens' assemblies, deliberation and the wider information environment.

Selma Tilikete is a PhD student in political sciences at the Paris 8 University. Her research focuses on sortition in politics, climate change and environment, and studies of science and expertise.