I am indebted to many teachers, colleagues, friends, reviewers, and institutions, who supported me through several years of study. Sections of this monograph have been in preparation for a long time, with its core growing from my dissertation, which was discussed at the Freie Universität, Berlin. I was especially lucky to study under the direction of Mark Geller, whose questions and intuition have inspired and shaped my research. I will always be thankful for his constant encouragement, advice, and for his trusting this project from its earliest stages, when, due to lack of concrete evidence, the general opinion on the matter was not the most reassuring. I also want to express my sincere gratitude to Klaus Geus, as well as to Philip van der Eijk, Cale Johnson, and Paul Iversen for their careful reading of the manuscript when it was still at an early stage. Philip van der Eijk in particular brought to my attention some Graeco-Roman sources that turned out to be essential to this work, and Cale Johnson offered several insightful observations on the drafts of my manuscript. Paul Iversen also read various drafts of the work, often discussing it with me, checking its Greek passages, and kindly correcting my English.

While in Berlin I benefited from the many conversations I had with Stefanie Rudolf, Netanel Anor, Lucia Raggetti, Marvin Schreiber, and all other friends, colleagues, and guests of TOPOI's Wissensgeschichte group. Their company, patient listening, and wonderful support improved the quality of my studies and of my life during the ups and downs of those years. Among them, Henry Stadhouders was always most generous, sharing his knowledge, tablets, photographs, and alerting me to relevant publications, which I deeply appreciated. I am particularly obliged to TOPOI for its financial support; without it, I would have never been able to dedicate my time to this project.

The members of Philip van der Eijk's Montag's colloquium group at the Humboldt University have also inspired my work, improving it with important suggestions in areas where I needed guidance. I thank all of them.

A number of foundations and academic institutions have further helped me achieve this monograph's final shape. In 2020–2021 the American Council of Learned Societies granted me a fellowship, which allowed me to take time away from teaching and reflect on the evidence I had thus far collected, while preparing additional Chapters that I felt were necessary to better contextualize the treatment of the subject. Free from academic duties, that year also gave me the time necessary to be able to disentangle highly problematic aspects in some of my case studies, as the ones in Ch. 7.2 (which I now consider the most indisputable evidence confirming the thesis of the book). The following summer a NEH Summer Grant also supported my work on this project. While I am immensely grateful to the ACLS and NEH foundations for giving me these opportunities, any views, findings, conclusions, or recommendations expressed in this publication do not necessarily reflect those of the American Council of Learned Societies and the National Endowment for the Humanities.

I am similarly indebted to a number of other programs and institutions that contributed to my work in various manners, allowing me to travel, to present at conferences, to share ideas with colleagues, and to study the primary sources in museum collections. Among them are TOPOI, the VIU Advanced Seminar in the Humanities, CWRU, its Classics and History Departments, the Baker Nord Center, the W. P. Johns Foundation.

I cannot conclude these words without mentioning my family, whose love and steady presence during the most difficult moments of the last few years have given me the strength to persevere and finish. I dedicate this book to the memory of my father, who first nourished my curiosity and passion for history.
