The following work, which comprises both the present book and a second one to follow, presents the fruit of research, reflection, and writing that has spanned more than a decade. Details regarding the genesis and development of the work are found in the introduction. Here I wish to acknowledge some people and institutions who have supported my work.

I thank the Alexander von Humboldt Foundation, which sponsored a three-month, alumni research stay at the Humboldt University in Berlin in 2012. In that time, I was able to complete some early drafts of material that appears in this work. A special word of thanks goes to my academic host at the Humboldt University, Prof. Dr. Jens Schröter, who not only helped make possible an enjoyable and fruitful stay in Berlin, but who also provided early feedback on some of the work, and who encouraged me to turn it into a book—which has now become two books. The library staff at Australian Lutheran College (University of Divinity) has rendered great help, particularly by obtaining books and articles that were otherwise difficult to access. I thank the editorial board of the BZNW series and the editorial staff at De Gruyter for accepting my work for publication, as well as the production team for assistance in bringing the manuscript to published form.

Work on the two books occurred on three continents, over a period that included an international move. Through it all, my wife and children have been my constant companions. I thank them for their support and encouragement, and I dedicate this work to them with much affection.
