

Acknowledgement

This volume brings together ideas from two collaborative research projects, Translating Memories: The Eastern European Past in the Global Arena, at Tallinn University, Estonia, led by Eneken Laanes, and Mnemonic Migration: Transnational Circulation and Reception of Wartime Memories in Post-Yugoslav Migrant Literature, headed by Jessica Ortner at the University of Copenhagen, Denmark. We combined the perspectives and insights developed in these projects when we co-organised the conference “Mnemonic Migration: Transcultural Transmissions, Translation and Circulation of Memory Across and Into Contemporary Europe” in April 2022 in Copenhagen. Thanks to the original and challenging contributions from the conference participants and the fruitful discussions at the conference, this volume found its form. We are grateful to our participants for sharing their stimulating work and illuminating case studies from a plethora of different literatures within the framework of this book. We would especially like to thank the keynote speakers at the conference Astrid Erll and Rebecca Walkowitz for offering ground-breaking ideas for how to think further about the translation, dissemination and reception of cultural memories in literature.

We are grateful to the funding bodies that have made the conference and the work on this volume possible: the European Research Council Starting Grant scheme under the European Union’s Horizon 2020 research and innovation programme (grant agreement No 853385) and the Danish Independent Research Council.
