

Contents

Ismay Milford, Corinna R. Unger, and Iris Borowy

Environment, technology, and development: History of a contentious relationship — 1

Part 1: Competing Visions of Progress

Julia Mariko Jacoby

“Governing the mountains, governing the water” (chisan chisui): Developing rivers in modern Japan — 21

Daniel Pérez-Zapico

Coal anxieties and the search for a “moral” energy resource in early twentieth-century Catholic Spain — 49

Elena Kochetkova

The ideals of rationality and development in the political economy of the late Soviet Union — 71

Odinn Melsted, Cyrus C. M. Mody, George Roberts, Candida F. Sánchez Burmester
The limits to growth and development? Computer modeling, planetary limits, and the question of industrial development in the Global South, 1960s–1970s — 93

Part 2: Producing and Challenging Expertise

Veronika Eszik

From well to tap: social and technical water innovations in nineteenth-century Budapest — 119

Bryan U. Kauma

“Agriculture is a scam!”: Agrotechnologies and the agrarian fallacy among African grain farmers in colonial Zimbabwe, the 1920s to 1970s — 139

Karolin Wetjen

Faith, empire, and weather: Missionary contributions to colonial climatology — 167

Eleanor Choo

Supplying and sustaining the nervous system of the world (c.1850 to 1939) — 187

Part 3: Techniques and Experimentation

Robert Batchelor

Extrastate development: Marshallese stick charts and the politics of infrastructure in the nineteenth-century Pacific — 211

Evelyne N. Tegomoh

From thatched to corrugated roofs: Technological development of houses within the Papiakum landscape — 243

Giovanni Tonolo

Getting the most without transforming the environment: The bumpy road to the oil mills in the French colony of Dahomey — 269

Corentin Gruffat

Animal improvement in the age of illustration: Visual technologies, breed selection, and cattle husbandry in the nineteenth-century Habsburg monarchy — 289

Amalia Ribi Forclaz

Seeds and the technopolitics of environmental reconfiguration in wartime relief operations in Italy, 1945–1947 — 313