Acknowledgement

This book would not have been possible without the assistance of many helping hands. First and foremost, the authors would like to thank the Jasen family, especially Roe, June and Henry, who, as descendants of Georg and Edith Tietz, opened to us their family archives at the Leo Baeck Institute in New York. It was for us a special honor and pleasure that Roe Jasen, even at her advanced age, gave us a long interview and patiently answered many questions. Dr. Frank Mecklenburg from the Leo Baeck Institute expertly guided our archival research and provided us with a wealth of helpful information during numerous discussions. We would also like to express our special thanks to Dr. h. c. Charlotte Knobloch, who witnessed the restitution negotiations in her father's law firm after the end of World War II. Our interview with her provided us with many invaluable insights. The Karg Family Foundation enabled us for the first time to access its historical document collection for our scholarly research project. We would like to thank Manuela Damm, Philipp Jungblut, and Guido Schäfer for their trust and openness. We would also like to thank Dr. Dorothea Hauser for her expert advice and support during our research at the Warburg Archive Foundation, Markus Holmer for his assistance in evaluating sources from the ERGO Archive, and Rupert Tiefertaler for his support during our work at the Liechtenstein National Archives in Vaduz. Angela Sponholz provided us with advice and assistance as we reviewed the vast holdings of the Compensation Board of the State of Berlin.

Dr. Andrea H. Schneider-Braunberger deserves our special thanks for her tireless coordination of the project, even in times of pandemic-related challenges. On behalf of the Gesellschaft für Unternehmensgeschichte, we would also like to thank Kai Balazs-Bartesch, Michael Bermejo-Wenzel, Fabian Engel, Saskia Heinz, Tanja Roos, and Tobias Stingel-Böcking for their multitalented support.

The authors owe a wealth of ideas and important references to archival sources to expert discussions with colleagues at the University of Frankfurt's Chair of Economic and Social History. The ongoing dialogue with members of the Her.Tietz initiative and Nils Busch-Petersen was also a constant source of inspiration.

Our special thanks go to Richard Pettit who very carefully and professionally translated the German manuscript and to De Gruyter Brill for publishing the English version. Last not least, Fabian Bergmann deserves thanks for his meticulous proofreading, as does Jutta Pulter for her flawless editing of the manuscript, and Elke Posselt and Babett Fugmann, who, with great enthusiasm and commitment, supervised the transition from the submitted manuscript to the book.
