Acknowledgements

This monograph is a minimally revised version of my MIT doctoral dissertation. I would like to take this opportunity to thank my thesis committee for invaluable help in the preparation of this dissertation. Most of the leading ideas developed here are due to Noam Chomsky, and a number of his specific suggestions greatly improved a first draft of these chapters. Ken Hale gave me the right perspective through which to appreciate and understand variation among different languages and dialects. His insights figure prominently in the way I have looked at facts which at first sight appeared to be wildly idiosyncratic and unconnected. Thanks go to Jim Harris for pressing me to be explicit and clear about the claims and explanations I propose. His questions and comments led to numerous improvements in Chapter 1 and 2. He was always quick to find examples to illustrate my points.

This work owes a special intellectual debt to Richie Kayne. It is often said that a lot of the work in generative grammar done in the late 60's and early 70's found its starting point in the footnotes to Aspects. I think there is little doubt that much of the work currently done on Romance syntax can be traced back to Kayne's French Syntax. The reader acquainted with Kayne's work will recognize its influence in virtually every one of the following pages.

I would also like to thank my other teachers at MIT: Morris Halle, Joan Bresnan, David Perlmutter, Paul Kiparsky, Haj Ross, George Boolos, and Jay Keyser. Although they were not closely connected with the writing of this study, they all contributed in essential ways to my linguistic education.

The European linguistics community in Cambridge was a constant source of new ideas and helpful suggestions. Among those who contributed most directly I would like to mention: Adriana Belletti, Jean-Roger Vergnaud, Henk van Riemsdijk, Luigi Rizzi, Giuseppe Longobardi, and Guglielmo Cinque.

Thanks also go to my fellow students at MIT, from whom I learned at least as much as I learned in class. I am thinking in particular of: Hagit Borer, Tim Stowell, Youssef Aoun, Ann Farmer, Maria Luisa Zubizarreta, Shelly Lieber, Dominique Sportiche, Luigi Burzio, David Pesetsky, Ken Safir, Anne Rochette, and Bob Ingria. Conversations with Youssef Aoun notably speeded up progress on the material in Chapter 1. Many thanks to Anne Rochette for proofreading several chapters of the manuscript.

Finally, for friendship, linguistic and otherwise, I want to thank: Jaklin Kornfilt, Leland George, Neil Elliott, Marcia Lind, Carmen Picallo, Alberto Rivas, Julia Horvath, Mark Baltin, Bob Freidin, Jan Koster, Bonnie Wilker Stephens, and Nina Hyams.
