

Table of contents

Acknowledgements	9
Preface	13
1 Regulating labour migration	17
1.1 The state	17
1.2 Markets	19
1.3 Citizenship	22
1.4 Rights	26
1.5 Migration policies	29
1.6 Law and illegal migration	31
2 Research design and methodology	35
2.1 Research questions	35
2.2 Case selection	37
2.3 Elements of analysis	39
2.4 Methodological approach	41
2.5 Fieldwork in two sites	45
3 Malaysia	49
3.1 Introduction	49
3.2 Exporting goods, importing labour	51
3.3 Towards a guestworker policy	58
3.4 Letting them in...	64
3.5 ... but only as foreigners	74
3.6 Turning illegal migrants into guestworkers	84
3.7 Detaining and deporting 'illegals'	93
3.8 Final remarks	101
4 Spain	105
4.1 Introduction	105
4.2 From emigration to immigration	107
4.3 From emigration control to immigration policies	115
4.4 Restricting entry	122
4.5 Between guestworkers and citizens	135

4.6 Regularisation: an entry policy?	143
4.7 Deportation from within and from without	162
4.8 Final remarks	173
5 Comparative perspective	177
5.1 Towards closure	177
5.2 The market response	180
5.3 Rights' constraints	185
5.4 Regaining control	187
5.5 Final exclusion	190
6 Conclusions	195
6.1 State response to labour demands	195
6.2 Markets, citizenship and rights	198
6.3 The illusion of migration 'management'	202
6.4 The state's production of illegality	205
6.5 Meanings of illegality	208
6.6 Towards a theory of borders and confines	210
References	213
Annex 1: Maps of Malaysia and Spain	230
Annex 2: Acronyms	232
Annex 3: Migration policies	233
Annex 4: List of interviews	239
Annex 5: Graph of immigration trends by nationality in Spain	243
Notes	244