

Table of Contents

Preface	7
1 “Serious queries” and “editorial epistemologies” How social media are contending with misinformation Richard Rogers	9
2 Problematic information in Google Web Search? Scrutinizing the results from U.S. election-related queries Guillen Torres	33
3 The scale of Facebook’s problem depends upon how “fake news” is classified Richard Rogers	47
4 When misinformation migrates Cross-platform posting, YouTube and the deep vernacular web Anthony Glyn Burton	67
5 Fringe players on political Twitter Source-sharing dynamics, partisanship and problematic actors Maarten Groen and Marloes Geboers	83
6 Twitter as accidental authority How a platform assumed an adjudicative role during the COVID-19 pandemic Emillie de Keulenaar, Ivan Kisjes, Rory Smith, Carina Albrecht and Eleonora Cappuccio	109
7 The earnest platform U.S. presidential candidates, COVID-19, and social issues on Instagram Sabine Niederer and Gabriele Colombo	139
8 A fringe mainstreamed, or tracing antagonistic slang between 4chan and Breitbart before and after Trump Stijn Peeters, Tom Willaert, Marc Tuters, Katrien Beuls, Paul Van Eecke and Jeroen Van Soest	165

9	Political TikTok	187
	Playful performance, ambivalent critique and event-commentary
	Natalia Sánchez-Querubín, Shuaishuai Wang, Briar Dickey and Andrea Benedetti
	Afterword: The misinformation problem and the deplatforming debates	207
	Bibliography	213
	Index	237