

About the authors

Thijs Brocades Zaalberg is an associate professor at the Faculty of Military Sciences at the Netherlands Defence Academy in Breda. He is also an assistant professor at Leiden University. He specializes in irregular military operations in a colonial and modern context.

Eveline Buchheim studied Dutch and anthropology, and is a researcher at NIOD. Her interest lies in the intersection between language and the interaction between people, especially in times of war, in both Europe and Asia.

Esther Captain is a historian and senior researcher at the KITLV. She was previously a researcher at the Nationaal Comité 4 en 5 mei, Utrecht University, and the University of Amsterdam. She also worked as a project leader on Indies heritage for the Dutch Ministry of Health, Welfare and Sport's War Heritage programme.

Martijn Eickhoff is a historian and has been the director of NIOD since September 2021. Since 2019, he has also been endowed professor of Archaeology and Heritage of War and Mass Violence at the University of Groningen. Between 2006 and 2015, he was affiliated with Radboud University Nijmegen as an assistant professor of cultural history.

Roel Frakking specializes in colonial violence. Between 2017 and 2021, he was a senior researcher at the KITLV. He currently works as an assistant professor at Utrecht University.

Azarja Harmanny is a research associate at the Netherlands Institute for Military History (NIMH) in The Hague. His previous work included research on the use of violence during the Aceh War.

Meindert van der Kaaij worked as a journalist for the newspaper Trouw until 2020. In 2012, he took his doctorate from Leiden University with a political biography of the Dutch statesman Dirk de Geer (1870-1960). Between 2017 and 2021, he was a researcher at the KITLV.

Jeroen Kemperman is a historian and researcher at NIOD. He has previously written about the Dutch student resistance during the German occupation, the Japanese camps in Indonesia, and the fall of the enclave of Srebrenica. He is currently working on a thesis about the Municipality of Amsterdam during the Second World War.

Rémy Limpach is a senior researcher at the NIMH. He previously published the book De brandende kampongs van generaal Spoor [The burning kampongs of General Spoor, 2016] and specializes in twentieth-century Dutch colonial military history.

Bart Lutikhuis specializes in the late colonial history and decolonization of Indonesia, and was a researcher at Leiden University and the KITLV from 2014. Since September 2020 he has been working as a primary school teacher.

Gert Oostindie is emeritus professor of Colonial and Postcolonial History at Leiden University and was director of the KITLV until 1 January 2022. He initially focused on Latin America, particularly the Caribbean, and later broadened his field of interest to include Dutch colonial and postcolonial history.

Remco Raben teaches Asian, global and colonial history at Utrecht University and is an endowed professor of colonial and postcolonial literature and cultural history at the University of Amsterdam.

Peter Romijn is a historian, head of the Research department at NIOD and part-time professor in the history of the twentieth century at the University of Amsterdam.

Ben Schoenmaker is the director of the NIMH. He specializes in the military history of the Netherlands in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. He is an endowed professor of military history at the Institute for History at Leiden University.

Onno Sinke works as a historian and senior policy researcher/adviser at the ARQ Centre of Expertise for War, Persecution and Violence. He was seconded to the KITLV during the research.

Fridus Steijlen is a senior researcher at the KITLV and professor of Moluccan Migration and Culture in Comparative Perspective at VU University Amsterdam. Since his student days, he has been involved in studying the decolonization of Indonesia and the Moluccan and Indo-Dutch communities.

Frank van Vree is emeritus professor of the History of War, Conflict and Memory Studies at the University of Amsterdam, and was the director of NIOD until September 2021. Previous positions include dean of the Faculty of Humanities, and professor of Media Studies at the University of Amsterdam, and visiting researcher at New York University.

Stephanie Welvaart studied anthropology and sociology, and was affiliated to NIOD between 2017 and 2021. She has a great interest in power structures and how individuals act within them. She studies the representation of colonization and decolonization in relation to Indonesia.

Esther Zwinkels is a research associate at the NIMH and specializes in twentieth-century Dutch colonial history. She is working on a thesis about the trials of collaborators and Japanese war criminals after the end of the Second World War in Indonesia.

Hilmar Farid is a historian and public intellectual. Between 2016 and 2021, he was chair of the Indonesian Historical Society. He is a lecturer for the post-academic programme at the Jakarta Arts Institute and focuses on themes such as truth-finding, reconciliation and redress.