

Acknowledgements

Thank you from the bottom of my heart to the friends who quietly supported my efforts to question the official Covid narrative at a time when it felt somewhat subversive to do so, especially Hynek Pallas, José Faraldo, James Kapaló, Uladzislau Belavusau, Jean-Pierre Ostertag, Claudia Graband, Milan Hanyš, Agnès Lesage, Lukáš Kraus, Annina Gagyiová, Paddington Tucker, Michel Teboul, Jean-Paul Teboul, Lola Gruber, Marián Lóži, Gérard-Daniel Cohen, Estelle Calvy, Jitka Pallas, and Jiří Pallas. You all have kept me sane, and I am tremendously grateful for your encouragements.

Special thanks to my father, Bruno Blaive, who refreshed my memory about his career as professor of medicine and hospital department head, as well as to my godfather, Henri Nussbaumer, for his encouraging comments on the first draft of this book. I am also deeply grateful to the peer reviewers for providing me with insightful comments and references. Thank you as well to D. Alan Dean, Anthony Mckeown, Warren Pearce, Jenin Younes, Mario Gollwitzer, and Christopher Elliott, who generously shared with me the information or references I needed.

Heartfelt thanks to Jen McCall, Linda Kunos, and especially Tony Mason at CEU Press, who encouraged me to write a book I was sure no university press would want to publish and who supported me all the way. Many thanks as well to John Puckett and József Litkei for their enthusiasm and excellent work. The Central European University proved to be a rallying institution in this time of crisis: Constantin Iordachi and Balázs Trencsényi at East Central Europe and Ferenc Laczó at Review of Democracy published articles of mine touching on Covid issues early on; András Bozóki generously offered to circulate one of my texts among his students to gain feedback; and Éloïse Adde graced me with her brilliant intellectual input. The CEU rocks! Thirty-five years after the fall of communism in Central Europe, the university is more than ever a beacon of critical reflection.

When the stars align, social media can be an appreciable tool for creating social fabric. Many people criticize Twitter as a purveyor of online hate, and this is doubtless true in many cases. But the platform also provides a uniquely democratic opportunity to bypass technocratic gatekeepers and communicate with anyone, no matter their social status. I have enjoyed this intellectual and human potential. Beyond a mostly friendly crowd which has engaged me in a number of fruitful debates, I have discovered new colleagues and sometimes made new friends, personalities who have welcomed critical perspectives on the Covid response with a heartwarming measure of humanity, grace, and intellectual support. A very special mention in this respect goes to Toby Green, Ian Sollicec, Anthony LaMesa, Daniel Hadas, Ondřej Krátký, Jason Strecker, Kevin Bardosh, Maximilien Lacour, Thomas Fazi, Jenin Younes, and Jay Bhattacharya. Your kindness in these troubled times has meant more to me than I can express.

I dedicate this book to the courageous individuals, anonymous or famous, who stood up to peer pressure and authoritarianism, who never compromised on critical thinking, sometimes at great cost to their career, and who resisted the ambient dehumanization of others. As a historian of communism, I knew all, in theory, about the feeling of solidarity stemming from standing together as a small group against the rest of the world. But I never dreamed I would experience it firsthand one day. To the dissidents!

September 12, 2024

This book incorporates material from previously published works, which have informed and shaped its development. I have revised and expanded them into the broader scope and arguments presented here. They include:

- Blaive, Muriel. “(Literally) Scared to Death: The Urgency of a Balanced Debate about Covid.” Britské listy, October 9, 2020, <https://blisty.cz/art/101421-literally-scared-to-death.html>.
- Blaive, Muriel. “Surveillance Society: From Communist Czechoslovakia to Contemporary Western Democracies.” In East Central Europe 49, nos. 2–3 (October 2022): 254–75.
- Blaive, Muriel. “Illiberal Liberalism: Covid and the Moral Crisis of the Left.” Review of Democracy, November 17, 2023, <https://revdem.ceu.edu/2023/11/17/illiberal-liberalism-covid-and-the-moral-crisis-of-the-left/>.
- Blaive, Muriel. “Censorship is unacceptable in democracies—It also disqualifies the ‘We didn’t know’ argument,” Collateral Global, February 8, 2024, <https://collateralglobal.org/wp-content/uploads/2024/02/censorship-unacceptable-democracies.pdf>.

Moreover, this work has been supported by the Austrian Science Fund (FWF) via Elise Richter grant no. V912-G. The FWF has also supported the Open Access policy for this volume with grant PUB 1183-P (DOI: 10.55776/PUB1183.) Many thanks to the FWF for this double support, as well as to the Sociology Department at the University of Graz and to my friend and colleague, Libora Oates-Indruchová.