ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This book is the beneficiary of support, advice, criticism and discussion from many people. Colleagues and students have provided a persistent stimulus, especially by requiring me to defend my ideas against their attack. Those whom I have not acknowledged severally will, I hope, accept my thanks here.

In particular, I have profited from conversations and seminars with Myles Burnyeat, Geoffrey Lloyd, Martha Nussbaum and G.E.L. Owen, who have provided a climate of philosophical excitement and meticulous enquiry both in Cambridge and at Harvard. They, A.W.H. Adkins, and Gerasimos Santas have read and provided valuable comments on drafts of Plato on Punishment; my warm thanks to them for the liberal gift of their time and the assistance of their encouragement and advice. Malcolm Schofield was equally generous, and he has been tireless as a supervisor, constant as a friend. I owe him a great deal.

An early version of this work (entitled "Plato's Theory of Punishment and its Antecedents") formed my doctoral dissertation at the University of Cambridge. Parts of Chapter 6 appeared in Philosophy and Literature (Spring 1978); I am grateful to the editor for permission to reprint that article here.

Grant Barnes of the University of California Press has been helpful and supportive throughout; to him too, I am very grateful. I should also like to thank Sheila Levine, Susan Peters, Rebecca Stein, and Leonie Gordon for their editorial assistance. Helen Gibson typed the manuscript with exemplary patience and skill. I thank her.

Gavin, my husband, has sustained me throughout; my debt to him goes far beyond the scope of an acknowledgement. Finally, the book is dedicated to my parents, in deep gratitude.
