Acknowledgments

First of all, I would like to thank my four directeurs de conscience: Hanna Pitkin, the only person who ever taught me to write; Ken Jowitt, without whose lectures I would not have even thought of writing on Russia and whose zeal kept me going; Paul Rabinow, who provided constant methodological inspiration and who knew what the art of existence meant; and Reggie Zelnik, who unobtrusively but sternly held my theoretical fantasy within empirical bounds. Victoria Bonnell's graduate research seminar at the University of California, Berkeley, was the place where for the first time I tried out my ideas on Foucault and Russia, and I owe her and other seminar participants my greatest thanks for their willingness to experiment.

I also thank those who were part of the background for writing this book: Vadim Volkov, in constant interaction with whom my thinking evolved, and the four kindred spirits—Valerie Sperling, Jeff Sluyter, David Woodruff and David Montgomery—who, by their joint corrective effort and especially by inserting the right articles in the right places, embodied themselves in this text and thus became part of the book.

Research and writing were supported by an SSRC-MacArthur Fellowship in Peace and Security in a Changing World, and by a particularly timely grant from the Berkeley Program in Soviet and Post-Soviet Studies. The Harvard Academy for International and Area Studies provided a very encouraging environment for discussing and making an unending stream of revisions that this manuscript had to undergo in the last couple of years. I thank all those who contributed their substantial remarks and reviews to this exercise in constant change: Luc Boltanski, Robert Crummey, Hubert Dreyfus, Boris Firsov, Sheila Fitzpatrick, Martin Jay, Edward Keenan, Stephen Kotkin, Colleen Lye, Tim MacDaniel, Laurie Manchester, Irina Paperno, Michael Rogin, Monique de Saint-Martin, Adam Seligman, Bill

Todd, Michael Urban, Veljko Vujacic, and Jeff Weintraub. My multiple shortcomings and their numerous misgivings clearly emerged into the open after our interaction; if I kept the former and sustained the latter, they are not to blame.

Finally, I thank all of my colleagues at the Faculty of Political Sciences and Sociology at the European University at St. Petersburg and the class of 1996–97 for making me believe that speech acts really matter.
