

Acknowledgments

I am fortunate to have received encouragement from family, friends, mentors, and colleagues for as long as I can remember. My mom, Diane Delmont, gets top billing because she has played the largest role in my life. Among many things, what I value most is that she taught me the importance of working hard every day and being nice to people. I could not ask for a more dedicated and caring parent.

My extended family have, each in their own way, shaped the person I have become. Thank you to Kaye Henrikson, Bobbie and Lindy Stoltz, Katie Stoltz, Terry Lick, Leari Jean and Jewel Anderson, Frank Bowman, my late aunt Joanne Tucker, Jason Tucker, Mel Wernimont, Nancy Wernimont, Nicole Wernimont and Ramses Madou, and Zach Wernimont for their love and support.

Thank you to all of my teachers, especially Mrs. Knox and Mr. Hauer at Burroughs Elementary School and Mike Byrne, Solfrid Ladstein, Michael Manning, Robert Slater, and Colonel (Ret.) John Gritz at Saint Thomas Academy. Thanks also to Tim Kelly whose generosity enabled me to attend Saint Thomas Academy. Thanks to Peter Lindsay for answering various questions about social theory as a sophomore at Harvard and to Adam Biggs for reading multiple drafts of my undergraduate senior thesis. I now understand much better how much work that entails.

While I did not end up working in marketing, Chris Clouser has been a generous and kind mentor.

I am blessed to have many good friends from different stages in life. Thanks especially to Jason Christopher, Doug Hoffert, Shawn Anderson, Tim Arnold, Victor Danh, Jake Ewart, Jake Lentz, Ken Miller, Cabral Williams, Paul Berens, Kevin Berry, John Foley, Peter Fritz, Dave Semerad, George Smolinski, Joe Wills, Kate Arnold, Kara Alexander, Sonia Berlin, Don Casey, Jessie and Ben Davis, Holly Eagleson, Emilie Ewart, Kara Hughes, Katie Monin, Sarah and Matt Sherman, Heather Stroud, Brian and Debra Ballentine, Dave Ben-Merre, and Keri Holt.

I thank Matt Garcia and Susan Smulyan for being excellent mentors and advisers, as well as helpful critics of my work. They saw this project grow from its earliest stages and were always supportive. I also learned a great deal about teaching from watching them; I try to put this into practice on a daily basis. It's safe to say that I would not have become the type of researcher or teacher that I am without them as role models. I also learned a lot from Lynne Joyrich and Carl Kaestle during our discussions for field exams and while working on my dissertation. Thanks to Evelyn Hu-Dehart for giving me a place to work at the Brown University Center for the Study of Race and Ethnicity in the Americas, and for her job advice. Thanks to James Campbell, Bob Lee, and Ralph Rodriguez for being friendly and supportive. Thank you to the staff at the Sheridan Center for Teaching and Learning, especially Rebecca More and Laura Hess, for helping me become a better teacher. Thanks to my graduate school colleagues in the department of American Civilization, especially Jin Suk Bae, Liza Burbank, Alma Carrillo, Tom Chen, Joe Clark, Erin Curtis, Sara Fingal, Caroline Frank, Gill Frank, Jim Gatewood, Morgan Greffe, Karen Inoyue, Jessica Johnson, Stephanie Larrieux, Eric Larson, Mireya Loza, Angela Mazaris, Gabriel Mendes, Ani Mukherji, Nicole Restaino, Mikiko Tachi, Gosia Rymsza-Pawlowska, Felicia Salinas, Margaret Stevens, Aslihan Tokgoz, Sarah Wald, Susanne Wiedemann, and Miel Wilson. Special thanks to Marcia Chatlain and Mario Sifuentez for being great office mates and friends in graduate school.

The Brown University Graduate School, Temple University Urban Archives, Philadelphia Jewish Archives Center, and Scripps College all provided financial support to defray research costs. Margaret Jerrido, Brenda Wright, John Pettit, and the other staff members at the Temple University Urban Archives were very friendly and helpful on several early mornings and late afternoons. The staffs at the Philadelphia City Archives, Philadelphia Schools District building, Philadelphia Jewish Archives Center, and African-American Museum in Philadelphia were also very generous with their time and expertise. Thanks to Terry Scott at West Philadelphia High School, Don Synder at South Philadelphia High School, and the librarians at William Penn High School, Northeast High School, and West Catholic High School for keeping their schools' yearbooks in safe places and for allowing me to look at them after their long school days. Thank you to everyone who took the time to talk to me about their memories of growing up in Philadelphia. Arlene Sullivan deserves a special thank you for putting me in touch with several other American Bandstand folks.

My editor at University of California Press, Niels Hooper, has been very supportive in bringing this project to print. Eric Schmidt, Kate Warne, Mary Francis, Hillary Hansen, Kim Hogeland and Caitlin O'Hara have also offered support at key stages. Thanks to Sybil Sosin for her careful copy editing. Thanks to George Lipsitz and Jay Mechling for offering comments on the draft manuscript that greatly strengthened this book. Thanks also to Josh Kun, Dan Horowitz, and Erika Doss for their support of my research.

Thank you to Tara McPherson, John Carlos Rowe, and Phil Ethington for organizing an engaging National Endowment for the Humanities/Vectors digital humanities seminar, and to all of the fellows who offered helpful suggestions as I prepared a digital companion to this book.

I've found, at Scripps College, an extraordinary place to teach American Studies. Thanks to Julie Liss, Rita Roberts, Sheila Walker, Bill Anthes, Nancy Neiman Auerbach, Hal Barron, Sid Lemelle, Mark Golub, Hao Huang, Eric Hurley, Amy Marcus-Newhall, Stu McConnell, Lily Geismer, Chris Guzaitis, Frances Pohl, Dan Segal, Diana Selig, Claudia Strauss, Cheryl Walker, and all my other colleagues at Scripps College and the Claremont Colleges. A special thanks to Cecilia Conrad, Michael Lamkin, and Lori Bettison-Varga for their early and consistent support.

Finally, thank you to Robert Scholes for teaching what turned out to be the most important seminar in my life. Numbers are not real, but if they were I would have to find a very large number to properly thank Jacque Wernimont for her love. I'll always associate this book with our summers in Philadelphia and the many happy memories before and after. We'll always have 4500 Springfield Avenue. A final thank you to Xavier Sebastian for arriving just before the deadline to submit these acknowledgments. Your timing is perfect and we love you greatly.
