

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

We would like to express our gratitude to the many people who helped us with the research that is the basis for this book. First, we thank all the Chinese sex workers (or xiaojies as they are called in China), who agreed to take part in our research and who willingly shared their stories with us. We owe our deepest thanks to these women, who are anonymous except for some pseudonyms here. Second, we are grateful to the various “facilitators” in the sex trade (agents, escort agency owners, mommies, brothel keepers, etc.) who not only let us talk to them, but also let us enter their world and see how they operate their businesses. Again, we can only thank them anonymously because their identities will not be revealed.

Because of Ko-lin Chin’s wide range of family and friends, we were able to rely on them to help directly and indirectly on the project. We owe a debt of gratitude to Huilin (a cousin), her husband C.Y. Shaw, and their son Rui Shaw for helping us in Singapore. In Hong Kong, we were assisted by Ah Ping (a cousin). We would also like to thank our friends: Yulan Chu, Chuanqiang Zhao, and Guanxuan Cao in Macau; Tiva Jentriacharn in Bangkok; Philip Tien, Benny Phan, and Ferry Siddharta in Jakarta; Punky Pang in Kuala Lumpur; Wei Chen and Jimeng Tang in China. We thank Robert Chu and his wife Jinfeng Gao in Vancouver. In the U.S., Meilan (a sister) and her husband Frank Su offered their help when we were in Los Angeles. We would also like to take this opportunity to express our heartfelt gratitude to our considerate and caring neighbors and friends—the Gundersen family (George II, Barbara, Teresa, and George III)—for support and encouragement, and for providing an ideal environment in which to live and write. Finally, we were also helped by Diana Hadel (Midge Finckenauer’s niece), who assisted with some translation from Indonesian.

Among the many individuals from the academic community who offered us their invaluable help, we are especially indebted to Yiu Kong Chu of the University of Hong Kong, Chuen-Jim Sheu of the National Taipei University, Pei-Ling Wang of Jinan University, Shu-Lung Yang of the National Chung Cheng University, Sandy Yu-Lan Yeh of the Central Police University, Narayanan Ganapathy of National Singapore University, Sheldon Zhang of San Diego State University, Mohd Kassim Noor Mohamed of Birmingham City University, and Yong Wang and Changrong Zhang of the Fuzhou Police Academy.

Many people in government and law enforcement also offered their help. We would like to thank Mark Taylor of the Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons, U.S. Department of State; Kevin Shu-sing Lau, Paul Fuk-chuen Cheng, Sunny Kai-chor Lam, Man-chung Wan, and Philip Kin-cheung Choy of the Hong Kong Police Force; Eric K. K. Chan, K. K. Yip, and Cindy So-ying Yeung of the Immigration Department of Hong Kong; Mathew Tyson of the U.S. Consulate General in Hong Kong; Chih-Kun Chiang of the Coast Guard Administration of Taiwan; Ann Hurst, Gary Phillips, and Gary Kiernan of the U.S. Embassy in Bangkok; Mathew King and Trung Vu of the U.S. Embassy in Singapore; Wong Choong Mann and Jason Loke Choy Seng of the Singapore Police Force; Stanley Harsha, Thomas Daniels, and Robert Barlow of the U.S. Embassy in Jakarta; Law Hong Soon of the Royal Malaysian Police; Lee Baca of the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department; Pamela Chen and Nancy Fabrizio of the U.S. Attorney's Office, Eastern District of New York; David Stein and Tania Hedlund of the New York City Police Department; and Barbara Stolz of the U.S. Government Accountability Office.

We would also like to express our heartfelt gratitude to those people working for various nongovernmental organizations and social service agencies who gave us their time and help. We are particularly grateful to Elise Chung of Zi Teng in Hong Kong; Kendy Yim of Action for REACH OUT in Hong Kong; Fran Gau and Sally Chou of the Women's Rescue Foundation of Taipei; Ruengrawee Pichaikul Ketphol of the Asia Foundation in Bangkok; Michael Chong of the Malaysian Chinese Association in Kuala Lumpur; Selvi of Pink Triangle in Kuala Lumpur; Lee Soo Choo of Tenaganita in Kuala Lumpur; Elizabeth Dunlap of the International Organization for Migration in Jakarta; Debbie Marulanda of Refugee Resettlement and Human Trafficking in Newark, New Jersey; Gilbert Ortiz of the Human Trafficking Information and Referral Hotline in New York City; and Wenchi Yu Perkins of Vital Voices in New York City.

Ilene Kalish, Executive Editor at NYU Press, was critically helpful in shortening and improving the manuscript. She offered us many excellent suggestions, and above all was just a most pleasant person with whom to work. We are also indebted to Despina Gimbel, Managing Editor, and Aiden Amos, Editorial Assistant, of NYU Press for helping us in the transformation of our manuscript into a book.

Thanks also to five anonymous reviewers (in addition to Sheldon Zhang and Barbara Stolz) for their helpful comments on earlier drafts of this work. Judy Mellecker edited the manuscript and we would like to thank her for doing an excellent job. Thanks to Min Liu for managing our data sets. In addition, Phyllis Shultze of the Don M. Gottfredson Library of Criminal Justice, Rutgers University, deserves a special mention here for providing us with so much information and material on prostitution and sex trafficking.

The research project was supported by Grant No. 2006-IJ-CX-0008 awarded by the National Institute of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, U.S. Department of Justice. The points of view expressed here are solely those of the authors and do not necessarily represent the official positions or policy of the U.S. Department of Justice. We thank Karen Bachar, Jennifer Hanley, and John Picarelli of the National Institute of Justice for their support.

Finally, but most importantly, we would like to thank our wives—Catherine and Midge (Margaret)—for their encouragement and patience throughout the course of this project. Without their full support, this study would not have been completed. This book is dedicated to them.
