

Acknowledgments

During the writing and revising of this book, I have incurred innumerable debts. The first version of this work was my doctoral dissertation. The members of my committee at Temple University, Allen F. Davis, P. M. G. Harris, and Emma Lapsansky, in addition to giving editorial advice and guidance, always showed great interest in my topic, encouraging me to finally finish the project. Seminars at Temple University and at the Philadelphia Center for Early American Studies were also helpful. Participants there provided suggestions and comments on some of the early drafts. In particular, I would like to thank Jean R. Soderlund, Lisa Wilson, and Lucy Simler. Ric Northrup, Susan Mackiewicz, Judith Hunter, and Susan Klepp graciously shared their own work and supplied me with obscure citations.

Wayne Bodle encouraged me to publish my dissertation. James Kirby Martin, series editor, Colin Jones, Director of the New York University Press, and two unknown readers bolstered my confidence in this work. In addition, Colin Jones has always promptly returned my calls and courteously explained the intricacies of publishing. Despina P. Gimbel supervised the final editing of this manuscript and guided me through the process.

I received much needed assistance from the staffs of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, the Philadelphia City Archives, and the Library Company of Philadelphia. Rosemary Philips of the Chester County Historical Society and Laurie Rofini of the Chester County

Archives went beyond the call of duty in providing me with references, documents, and friendship.

“Real life” sometimes gets in the way of writing. Baby-sitters extraordinaire, Stephanie and Jennifer Stefanow, deserve special thanks for entertaining Megan while I worked. Friends: Chris, Steve, Irene, Jim, and Josie helped me work and play. Michael J. Turzanski cheerfully provided long-distance computer advice. I also received encouragement and support from my father, Lee L. Schreiber, my mother, Sylvia L. Schreiber, and my in-laws, Walter and Sandra Smith. All of them were wonderful about not asking, “when will you be finished?”

My daughter, Megan, has been a help by just being. She constantly reminds me of what is truly important. Sheryl was born as this book was ready to go to the press. She has added a new and joyous dimension to our lives. Finally, my husband, Doug, proofread, worked on statistics, and printed the dissertation and the book. More than that, he has shown enormous pride in my work, and even more love for me.
