

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Data collection for this study was supported in part by two financial awards from the University at Albany's Initiatives for Women, specifically the Karen R. Hitchcock New Frontiers Fund. This book was completed because I received support from the School of Criminal Justice at the University at Albany, the School of Criminal Justice at Rutgers University-Newark, and the Department of Sociology and Criminal Justice at Old Dominion University. I especially thank my colleagues and the doctoral students at ODU for their encouragement as I revised and finished this book. Cheers also go to the professional development/writing groups I've been a part of: Academic Pursuit at UAlbany and the "J-Team" at Rutgers.

I have been fortunate to have stellar mentorship. Jody Miller deserves much praise for reading many drafts (probably too many to count) of this manuscript, providing valuable comments, and helping me find my voice as a queer and feminist scholar. I am always in awe of Jody's critical and constructive eye. Dana Peterson advocated for me as I conducted this research and writing, and had faith in my ability to complete this project even when my own was wavering. I am inspired by her "onward and upward" spirit. Jamie Fader was influential in the design of my study and instrument, and helped me problem-solve often. Frankie Bailey helped me think through popular culture and historical representations.

I also consider myself very lucky to be part of a vibrant community of queer criminology scholars committed to social change. I am particularly appreciative for my dear friends Allyson Walker, Aimee Wodda, and Jordan Blair Woods, who read drafts and talked through difficult decisions with me. They have been excellent compasses in my scholarship and my life, and I treasure them. For needed breaks from or tireless encouragement for book writing, I thank my good friends Heidi Grundetjern, Chris Smith, Rose Bellandi, Raquel Derrick, Amy Hayter,

Michelle Hand-Lang, Alison Reed, Elizabeth Groeneveld, Topher Lawton, and Seigo Nishijima. It is truly a gift to be surrounded by positive, caring people.

In Columbus, my siblings, nieces, and nephews always warmly welcomed me home. They bring me so much joy! I miss them daily. I am especially grateful to my parents, Peter and Rachel Panfil, for being infinitely supportive of my queer activism and scholarship. I am beyond thrilled when they talk about my work with such pride.

At NYU Press, editor Ilene Kalish has my sincere gratitude for all of her work on this book, and her boundless enthusiasm for it. Thanks also go to Caelyn Cobb for editorial assistance. The manuscript was improved by reviews from Valerie Jenness, Wesley Crichlow, Robert Garot, and two other, anonymous reviewers. I also thank Jeff Ferrell for including me in the Alternative Criminology series, and for his and Clinton Sanders's call for a queered cultural criminology over 20 years ago.

Finally, I am eternally grateful to the 53 men who participated in my study, and to others who helped connect us. Thank you for sharing not only your words and experiences, but your fears, dreams, humor, and wisdom with me. I learned just as much about myself during this process as I learned about you. I will express my gratitude to you by always working to improve the lives of queer young people.

Portions of this book appear in these previous works of mine: "Better Left Unsaid? The Role of Agency in Queer Criminological Research," Critical Criminology 22(1): 99–111; "Gay Gang- and Crime-Involved Men's Experiences with Homophobic Bullying and Harassment in Schools," Journal of Crime and Justice 37(1): 79–103; "I Will Fight You Like I'm Straight': Gay Gang- and Crime-Involved Men's Participation in Violence," in Handbook of LGBT Communities, Crime, and Justice, edited by Dana Peterson and Vanessa R. Panfil, 121–145, New York: Springer; "Queer Anomalies? Overcoming Assumptions in Criminological Research with Gay Men," in Qualitative Research in Criminology (Advances in Criminological Theory, Vol. 20), edited by Jody Miller and Wilson R. Palacios, 169–189, New Brunswick, NJ: Transaction Publishers; Socially Situated Identities of Gay Gang- and Crime-Involved Men, University at Albany; (with Jody Miller), "Feminist and Queer Perspectives on Qualitative Methods," in Routledge Handbook of Qualitative Criminology, edited by Heith Copes and J. Mitchell Miller, 32–48, New York: Routledge.