

Reflective Writing in Medical Practice

LANGUAGE AT WORK

Series Editors: Jo Angouri, University of Warwick, UK and Rebecca Piekkari, Aalto University Business School, Finland

Language at Work is a new series designed to bring together scholars interested in workplace research. The modern workplace has changed significantly in recent years. The international nature of business activities and the increasing rate of mobility around the world create a new, challenging environment for individuals and organisations alike. The advancements in technology have reshaped the ways in which employees collaborate at the interface of linguistic, national and professional borders. The complex linguistic landscape also results in new challenges for healthcare systems and legal settings. This and other phenomena around the world of work have attracted significant interest; it is still common, however, for relevant research to remain within clear disciplinary and methodological boundaries.

The series aims to create space for the exchange of ideas and dialogue and seeks to explore issues related to power, leadership, politics, teamwork, culture, ideology, identity, decision making and motivation across a diverse range of contexts, including corporate, healthcare and institutional settings. Language at Work welcomes mixed methods research and it will be of interest to researchers in linguistics, international management, organisation studies, sociology, medical sociology and decision sciences.
