

Acknowledgements

The CLISS-project had not been possible without external funding. We are therefore grateful to the Swedish Research Council, who provided financial means (project number 721-2010-5376) to enable this unique longitudinal study to be realized. When funding was secured, the next step was to find informants willing to participate in the project, which is easier said than done for such long-term commitments. We are deeply grateful for the three schools, their teachers and students, who in the end decided to accept our invitation to be part of this cutting-edge research into CLIL in Sweden.

We would also like to show our appreciation for our publisher, Multilingual Matters. First, for their immediate and positive response to our initial request concerning this publication. Second, for the efficient, professional, and always friendly handling of the process, from start to end by everybody involved. In particular, I am grateful to Laura Longworth, who, with amazing patience, knowledge, and humor always responded to any queries along the way.

During the many years of this project, separate studies have been reported on at conferences and seminars. We are happy about all the insightful perspectives, comments, and questions provided by discussants, readers, and audience. Our gratitude also goes out to the anonymous reviewer(s), who really helped in bringing out the best in each chapter, and, not least, in structuring the volume in a reader-friendly and logical way.

As the editor of this book, I finally would like to thank all my CLISS colleagues for their hard work and dedication to the project. We did not choose the easiest route, but together we strove forward and managed to pull the project together. With this book in my hands, I can definitely say that it was worth all the effort!
