This book has been a sheer joy to write. Listening to the stories of former bilingual educators and their commitment to Coral Way has rejuvenated my advocacy for bilingual education, particularly in today's increasingly restrictive sociopolitical environment. I also believe that as we get older, we increasingly realize how important the past is. Thus, for me, writing The Coral Way Bilingual Program has been a journey that transcended time – from past to present and into the future.

First and foremost, I wish to thank Richard Ruiz who began the work on Coral Way in the late 2000s and whose inspiration and contribution to bilingual education in the United States cannot be underestimated. Alongside Richard, I wish to thank Bess de Farber, a colleague and now friend, who approached me with this work and who trusted me with the words and experiences of the former teachers of Coral Way between 1963 and 1968. I also wish to thank the former students and current educators of Coral Way who agreed to participate in this ongoing, longitudinal work. Their names are speckled throughout this book, but I especially wish to note Susana Martín from the Coral Way K-8 Bilingual Center who helped me gain access to the school and teachers. She is a true champion for bilingual education.

Others who have supported this work over the past two years include Dr Rosie Castro Feinberg, Dr Deon Heffington, Shuzhan Li, Andrew Long, Dr Mark Preston Lopez, Nidza Marichal, Aleksandra Olszewska, and Dr Lourdes Rovira who shared her wisdom and stories. The University of Florida librarians Brittany Kester and Perry Collins in the digital collections are simply amazing and assisted with obtaining permissions for use of archival data. Thank you to the Ford Foundation whose archives, approximately 280 pages, were accessed from the Rockefeller Archive Center in New York.

I also thank the series editors Dr Nancy Hornberger and Dr Wayne Wright who agreed that Coral Way was a story worth telling. To that end, Tommi Grover, Laura Longworth, Sarah Williams and Flo McClelland from the Multilingual Matters team also provided the best professional support an author could ask for. Multilingual Matters is a true ally in bilingual education worldwide.

My husband Tom, daughter Rae, stepchildren Austin and Emily, and pup Nori were willing to listen to me mumble around the house as I wrote and spoke endlessly about this exciting project. Rae provided professional graphic design support for the book cover and for reproduction of original materials in the book – thank you! Finally, this work is dedicated to my son, Thomas, whose absence from my life is ever present, a reminder that life is precious, and that although time passes by, we are forever changed by those who share our journey.
