Acknowledgments

This book marks for me a beginning in my life as an academic researcher. I fervently wish to serve with honor the community of South–North educators and participatory researchers.

The realization of this participatory study would not have been possible without the vibrant collective effort of los incansables estudiantes antonianas/os: Alex, Carmen, Cinthia, Diana, Emilio, Edgar, Frank, Fructuoso, Gabriel, Nilda, Pucahuayta, Ronald, Yanet, Yuly, Yexy, y Wences. I owe you much gratitude and hope to continue linking and learning with you in the coming years with this unfinished project in which we are involved. He tenido la fortuna de trabajar con Uds. Astawan qamkuna(wan) yachachiwanki. Kawsachun Panaturaykiykuna!

The participatory approach of this work is linked not only to my academic training but also to my intergenerational family and community. For that reason, sonqoy ukhupi, I am grateful to my relatives. I am grateful to have memories of my great-grandparents such as my great-grandma Juana, who, through her belly scar, has taught me so much, como mujer trenzante que disfrutaba su sara chicha luego de sus grandes quehaceres. My grandmothers Maria and Raquel, grandparents Melitón and Ramón, my mother Maria (quien a sido compañera vigilante en mi pasaje maternal y académico), my father Narciso (quien entre el viento siembra el pensamiento transversal y musica andina) aunts, uncles and cousins who believe in me, I thank you for all your good advice and practical examples. I especially appreciate the patience of my husband Doug Kenfield and his counter dialogues with whom I have grown so much, to the extent of becoming a mother of twins, mis wawas: T'ika and Chaski.

In addition, my academic family has been of great importance for the realization of this work. I greatly appreciate the collegiate community of the University of New Mexico. Special thanks are in order to my mentor Professor Carlos LopezLeiva who so many times with his sharp, pointy, sober comments has constantly awakened me. For their encouragement, many thanks go to professors: Trinidad-Galvan (que en paz descanse), Rosa Vallejos, Sylvia Celedon-Pattichis, Greg Cajete, Lorenda Belone and Holbrook Mahn.

I must also acknowledge all the support I have had at the San Antonio Abad University in Cusco through the teachers, professors and friends

Carmen y Ricardo, Jorge F.O., Maria del Pilar, Mario, Rita, Zoraida, Vicente, and the Research Institute of the University and Region. Thanks to the dialogues with the women weavers of Huayllapata, Apu Wayra collective, and yachachiq Q'orichaska and Julia. Last, but not least, I am very appreciative of the critical support of the staff at the Center for Andean and Amazonian Studies Bartolomé de las Casas, particularly a special thanks to Claudia, Ligia, Rafael, Valerio and Vilma.

It is really very difficult to recognize and thank a selection of people as I feel that the list does not cover many other significant persons, places, canciones, y sentipensamientos del Sur Global lleno de apapachos. Without further ado, I greet some of the Apus who make the path -Saqsaywaman, Huanacauri and Salkantay – where the Quechua people are constantly breathing.
