

Contributors

Hideko Abe is Professor of East Asian Studies Department, Colby College, USA and a linguistic anthropologist who is engaged in research projects related to language, gender and sexuality. She is the author of Queer Japanese: Gender and Sexual Identities through Linguistic Practices (Palgrave, 2010).

Anwei Feng is Professor of Language Education at the University of Nottingham Ningbo China (UNNC). He has had teaching and research experience in many countries and regions including China, Qatar, Hong Kong, Singapore and the UK. His research areas include multilingualism, multilingual education, and intercultural studies in education.

Mariarosaria Gianninoto holds a PhD in Asian Studies from Naples Oriental University (Italy) and a Habilitation to supervise research (HDR) in Linguistics at the School of Advanced Studies in Social Sciences (EHESS, Paris, France). She is currently a full professor of Chinese Linguistics at the Université Paul Valéry-Montpellier 3. Her research focuses on the history of Chinese linguistics and Chinese language learning.

Alexandra Grey researches language policies in practice, combining legal, sociolinguistic, and ethnographic approaches. She focuses on the governance of linguistically diverse societies in the People's Republic of China and Australia and received the international Joshua A. Fishman Award for the best dissertation on the sociology of language in 2018. She is a Chancellor's Postdoctoral Research Fellow in the Faculty of Law at the University of Technology Sydney.

S. Imtiaz Hasnain holds a PhD from the Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi, and has been an EWC Fulbright Scholar. Currently, he is a professor of Sociolinguistics, Department of Linguistics at Aligarh Muslim University, Aligarh and an Adjunct Faculty in Maulana Azad National Urdu University, Hyderabad. His research interests include sociolinguistics, critical discourse studies, language planning, language endangerment and minority language rights. He was an Editor-in-Chief, Indian Linguistics (Volumes 73–75).

Patrick Heinrich is Associate Professor at the Department of Asian and Mediterranean African Studies at Ca' Foscari University in Venice. His present research interests focus on sociolinguistics and urban studies in Japan. Recently edited books in English include The Routledge Handbook of Japanese Sociolinguistics (Routledge, 2018) and Urban Sociolinguistics (Routledge, 2017).

Mie Hiramoto is Associate Professor in the Department of English Language and Literature at National University of Singapore. Her research interests are sociolinguistics and linguistic anthropology, in particular contact linguistics (e.g. Japanese spoken outside Japan, Colloquial Singapore English) as well as language, gender and sexuality (e.g. Asian masculinity, ideologies in media).

Rigdol Jikar (Rouzhuo) is a PhD candidate in Education at the Victoria University, Australia. His research interests include the divergence and integration between traditional Tibetan education and modern education, traditional pedagogy, and the development of the Tibetan language.

Lian Luo is Associate Professor at the Minzu University of China. Her research interests include Chinese international education, language assessment and language teacher training.

Nicola McLelland is Professor of German and History of Linguistics at the University of Nottingham. Her research on the history of language standards and language variation, and of language learning and teaching, has led to her interest in multilingualisms past and present, and to a growing interest in the language varieties of China and of Asia more widely.

Suwilai Premsrirat (PhD, Monash University) is the founding director of the Resource Center for Documentation and Revitalization of Endangered Languages and Cultures at Mahidol University, Thailand. Her research into ethnic minority languages spans Southeast Asia. She directed the Patani Malay-Thai Bi/Multilingual Education Project, which received UNESCO's 2016 King Sejong Literacy Prize.

Tsering Samdrup is a PhD candidate at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London. His research mainly focuses on the languages and textual traditions of Tibet.

Maira Saltzman is a PhD candidate in Linguistics at the University of Michigan. Her academic interests lie in the phonological and morphological aspects of language change in contact environments. Maira's recent research includes the development of a multimedia talking dictionary of Jejuo, an endangered language of Jeju Island, South Korea.

Ying Sargin is a DAAD-funded PhD student at the Institute of East Asian Studies, University of Duisburg-Essen. Being a Sibe herself, she focuses on studying this speech community from a sociological perspective.

Hiroyuki Suzuki holds a DLitt in Linguistics from Kyoto University (2007) and is currently a research fellow at the Institute of Modern Languages and Linguistics, Fudan University, China. His principal research interests are descriptive linguistics, geolinguistics, dialectology and sociolinguistics of languages in the Tibetosphere.

Wang Xiaomei is Professor of Linguistics at the Department of Chinese Studies, Xiamen University Malaysia. Her main research interests include Malaysian Mandarin (global Chinese) and sociolinguistics (language maintenance and shift, language spread, multilingualism, linguistic landscape and language policy).

Jiaye (Jenny) Wu is a PhD student at the University of Nottingham. Her research, which is part of the Multilingualism: Empowering Individuals, Transforming Societies (MEITS) project, is about teaching standard Mandarin Chinese to Mongolian learners since 1912, in order to examine how national language standard, national identity, and citizenship are promulgated within a multilingual society over time.

Hui Zhao is currently an Honorary Research Fellow in the School of Cultures, Languages and Area Studies at the University of Nottingham, where she previously worked as a postdoctoral research associate on the Multilingualism: Empowering Individuals, Transforming Societies (MEITS) project. Her research interests include variationist sociolinguistics, language attitudes and perception, and bilingualism, particularly in the contemporary Chinese context.