Note on the Use of Original Scripts in this Volume

For the wide range of languages and scripts covered in this volume, we have cited works in the reference lists in their original scripts (when appropriate), with an English translation, rather than using romanizations. This ensures readers are able to identify these non-English works in their original.

For languages with more than one possible script (e.g. Simplified Chinese vs Traditional Chinese for Mandarin, Cyrillic vs traditional Mongolian for Mongolian) and different transcription conventions (e.g. pīnyīn with or without tone marks), we have trusted our contributors to choose the script and convention most appropriate for the linguistic and social contexts they work in.