So many friends and colleagues helped and encouraged me to continue this project and, as I mention in the book, it isn't complete but ongoing.

I am grateful to Youngshin Jung who looked after my two daughters with love and kindness. I was commuting from London to Oxford with no time to see my children sometimes, but often Mrs Jung left a small memo for me saying that Sarah had learned this word today or Jessie had said this word. She was like a mother to me and a grandma to my kids. A big thank you to her and her husband.

My Korean friends living in a small Korean community in London also provided a safe place for my kids to grow as bilinguals. Thank you to them also for their contribution to this book. They provided valuable comments that have demonstrated that we learn from our mistakes and that sharing is a great source of power to overcome difficulties when living as multilingual families.

I am very grateful to Louise Hossien for helping me at every stage of this project. Thanks also go to the wonderful editors of Multilingual Matters.

I dedicate this book to my late father Mr Taehoon Joe and my late father-in-law Stanley Kiaer whom I, together with my family, miss very much.
