Many thanks to Anna Roderick at Multilingual Matters for her enthusiasm about this project from the outset and to the three anonymous reviewers for their expertise and insights. Our gratitude also goes to Steven Talmy for his thought-provoking discussion on Critical Conversation Analysis at the 2022 American Association for Applied Linguistics (AAAL) conference and to the audience at our panel for helping us think through the many issues surrounding our endeavor. We are so lucky to have worked with this amazing group of stellar authors. As seasoned scholars and rising stars, they have not only opened our eyes to the astounding possibilities of putting CA to its critical use, but also shown us a tremendous amount of patience, grace and good will as they journeyed with us over the past two years to bring you – here at last – ‘Critical Conversation Analysis’.

HZW: This project was inspired by Nadja’s 2020 conversation analytic dissertation on diversity in the adult ESL classroom. Known as the ‘diversity diva’ among the #lansibunch, Nadja embodies ‘critical’ as a scholar, a teacher and a human being. She asks, ‘why not?’ and pursues, not what is prescribed, but what is possible. Hers is the kind of fresh voice that moves conversations and pushes fields forward. While I have more or less played the role of a curator, Nadja is, without a doubt, the soul of this volume.

NT: This project would not have been possible without the generosity that permeates Hansun’s scholarly work. Her wholehearted dedication not only sparked the idea for our critical CA venture but also turned what might have remained wishful thinking into the reality that is this volume. I am eternally grateful for her mentorship and collaboration.
