This book exists only thanks to the massive support and watchful guidance of my most dedicated and motivational mentors, who have illuminated the path of my research with their trust and enthusiasm. Much gratitude goes to the incredible editorial team at Multilingual Matters, who have been nothing short of extraordinary in bringing this book to fruition: the reviewers, for their utmost care and insightful feedback, and Rosie, for keeping my patience afloat and for being ever present and available throughout the production process. I extend my heartfelt gratitude to Hugo Azerad, for his unconditional support, friendship and empowering words since my undergraduate years at the University of Cambridge, which have illuminated my journey over the past decade, and Elsa Tragant and David Lasagabaster, for welcoming me into the field and for their enduring collaboration ever since. My thanks go equally to both Christine Muir, who encouraged me to write this book, and Sal Consoli, for their friendly eyes and words of wisdom every step of the way. My sincere gratitude also goes to Stephen Ryan and Sarah Mercer, whose work and talent have inspired me always. Finally, I am forever indebted to my three wonderful collaborators, co-narrators and participants, 'Georges', 'Josette' and 'Patricia', for their precious time, their steadfast commitment and unwavering enthusiasm for the project. Most importantly, their open-hearted willingness to share – and keep sharing – so much of themselves after all these years, has provided this study with an endless palette of colours and flavours for which I will be forever grateful. I owe eternal gratitude to all of those above-mentioned, who have been, through their uplifting and long-standing help, words and kindness, my 'Super Motivation' heroes, and the driving forces of this work. To my beloved ones and family, for their priceless and unfaltering love, which has helped me surf and push through my own waves of motivation without ever losing sight of the shore.
