This book has a significant backdrop in the form of the 2010–2011 Christchurch earthquake sequence and subsequent South Island earthquakes which we all either directly experienced or experienced the aftermath of. It has been a feature of a number of elements of our research in recent years. Direct experience and observation of individual, organisational, governmental, community and, of course, tourism responses to the earthquakes and their impacts laid the foundations for the present work. Extollation and praise from prime ministers, politicians, university leadership and the media to either being or needing to be resilient – at the same time as some interests benefited from the rebuild and recovery of Christchurch and others didn't – created a tension between academic discussion on resilience and on-the-ground experience. It is with this tension in mind, and the need to better clarify the term and its utility, that this book has been written.

Michael would like to thank a number of colleagues with whom he has undertaken related research over the years. In particular, thanks go to Duan Biggs, Dorothee Bohn, Tim Coles, David Duval, Alexandra Gillespie, Martin Gren, Stefan Gössling, Johan Hultman, Dieter Müller, Paul Peeters, Yael Ram, Jarkko Saarinen, Dan Scott, Anna Dóra Sæþórsdóttir and Allan Williams for their thoughts (and resilience), as well as for the stimulation of Agnes Obel, A Long Walk, Ann Brun, Beirut, Paul Buchanan, Nick Cave, Bruce Cockburn, Elvis Costello, Stephen Cummings, Chris Difford and Glenn Tilbrook, David Bowie, Ebba Fosberg, Aldous Harding, Father John Misty, Mark Hollis, Hoodoo Gurus, Margaret Glaspy, Aimee Mann, Larkin Poe, Vinnie Reilly, Susanne Sundfør, Matthew Sweet, David Sylvian, and The Guardian, BBC6 and KCRW – without whom the four walls of a hotel room would be much more confining. Michael would like to thank the many people who have supported his work over the years, and especially the Js and the Cs who stay at home and mind the farm. Girish would like to thank his parents, Ansoomatee and Jayduth, for their continuous love and support and would especially like to offer grateful thanks to Lyndon, Chris and Emma for putting up with him throughout the process of writing this book. Alberto would like to acknowledge the role of John and Jörg in advancing the understanding of resilience with respect to tourism and the service sector at large. Special thanks go to the staff at the University of Canterbury, particularly Irene and Donna. Finally, yet most importantly, Alberto would like to thank Bailey for her love and support throughout the drafting and edits of the book.

We are indebted to the support of several people at the University of Canterbury, but particularly Irene Joseph. In addition, we would like to note our thanks for the support of all at Channel View, and the comments of Dallen and Chris.
