Contributors

Allison Anderson has spent her working life spanning the academic and professional spheres of tourism and strategic planning, which explains much of her pragmatic research philosophy. She started her academic career in earth sciences, gaining a Bachelor of Science (honours) at Victoria University of Wellington, NZ. After building a consulting career advising on tourism development in Tasmania and North Queensland, she completed a Master of Urban & Regional Planning at James Cook University in Cairns, receiving an academic medal for her efforts. She worked as a strategic planner in an engineering firm, before completing her PhD in urban design and tourism, with the help of a Queensland Smart State PhD scholarship. Just before she submitted her PhD, she was appointed as a Lecturer in Tourism Planning at CQUniversity in Cairns, which then led to her current role leading the research and insights programme at Tourism Tasmania. Allison is also an Associate at the University of Tasmania.

Leonie Cassidy has a multidisciplinary PhD from James Cook University, Australia. Her research interests lie in the areas of climate change, coral bleaching, the Great Barrier Reef, tourist behaviour (including culture, digital device use, website use, photography and social media usage), website design (benchmarking, best practice and quality) and design science research. Leonie has published several journal articles, book chapters and articles in refereed proceedings in these areas, and continues research activities with CQUniversity, Cairns campus. She also lectures part time at James Cook University, including developing subjects in the areas of technopreneurship and entrepreneurship.

Linda Colley is an Associate Professor of Human Resources/Industrial Relations at CQUniversity, based on the Brisbane campus and affiliated with the Appleton Institute. She brings extensive practical experience from her career in HRM and industrial relations in the Queensland public service. Her research builds on this career, including both historical study of public employment trajectories and contemporary challenges such as workforce planning and institutional reform. She has published on topics such as gender, merit, tenure, job security, gender and age at work, public management reform and the effects of austerity measures on public employment.

ment of underwater cultural heritage'.

Kay Dimmock, PhD is a Senior Lecturer at Southern Cross University based in the School of Business and Tourism. Her work extends from business to tourism in higher education. In a tourism context Kay has researched social experiences including perceptions, beliefs and impacts on stakeholders through leisure and marine tourism. Her research has been individual and collaborative at local and regional levels. She works with tourism stakeholders including industry, community, researchers and government agencies to understand social dimensions of coastal and marine environments. Internationally, Kay works with fellow collaborators and has co-edited a textbook focused specifically on the tourism niche, SCUBA Diving Tourism. Supervision and mentoring HDR students to successful completion in marine related topics has involved Kay with projects including 'Phenomenology, women and surfing', 'Destination competitiveness and SCUBA diving tourism', 'White shark cave diving in Antje R.H. Graul, PhD, is an Assistant Professor of Marketing at the Jon M. Huntsman School of Business at Utah State University. Her research interests lie in the area of consumer decision-making and behaviour regarding sustainable modes of consumption such as consumer sharing and electric vehicle adoption. Before following her research interest, she spent two years in the industry focusing on marketing communications and public relations at the BMW Group, Germany.

Australia and potential for conservation' and 'Wreck divers and manage-

Rob Hales is the Director of the Griffith Centre for Sustainable Enterprise in the Griffith Business School. Rob is also the Program Director of the Master of Global Development and teaches courses in leadership for sustainability and research methods. His research interests include climate change policy, sustainable business, sustainable tourism and indigenous studies. He is also involved in governance of the sustainable operations of Griffith University, Queensland. His background in running a small business in tourism and environmental education informs his research and teaching.

Gui Lohmann is Professor in Air Transport and Tourism Management at Griffith University (Brisbane, Australia), one of the highest-ranked universities globally for tourism studies. He has authored several books, including editing Tourism in Brazil: Environment, Management and Segments and co-authoring Tourism Theory: Concepts, Models and Systems, published in English, Spanish and Portuguese. He has published broadly internationally, including more than 40 journal articles in leading peerreviewed tourism publications, such as Annals of Tourism Research, Journal of Sustainable Tourism, Current Issues in Tourism, Journal of Destination Marketing and Management and International Journal of Hospitality Management. He is also on the Editorial Board of Tourism Review and the Journal of Air Transport Management. At Griffith University, Gui has successfully supervised 10 PhD scholars from countries as diverse as Brazil, China, New Zealand, Serbia and Vietnam.

Tramy Ngo holds a PhD in Tourism Management from Griffith University (Australia). She is a tourism expert with a strong interest in tourism impact assessment, community development in tourism, Indigenous tourism, sustainable tourism and cross-cultural studies. After over 10 years working as a tourism lecturer in Vietnam, Tramy currently spans her professional expertise on the areas of tourism research and consultancies in Australia. Tramy has published her research projects in leading journals such as Journal of Sustainable Tourism and Current Issues in Tourism. The most recent consultation projects she contributed to include the Queensland Wine Tourism Strategy, the Central Highlands (Queensland) Caravan & Camping Strategy, and the Moreton Bay Region Tourism Economic Impact Analysis.

Yohei Okamoto (MPhil) is an Associate Lecturer in Tourism and Events at Murdoch University in Perth Australia. Yohei's current research focuses on philosophical issues in post-secondary tourism education, and digital game-based learning (DGBL) as a pedagogical tool for sustainable tourism education. He has also worked on research projects relevant to trails, community festivals and bicycle tourism. He is about to embark on his PhD journey on global nomads on bicycles.

Anja Pabel is a lecturer in tourism at CQUniversity in Cairns, Australia. Her research interests include tourist behaviour, marine tourism, tourism sustainability and humour research. Anja completed a Bachelor of Business with first class honours in 2009 at James Cook University (JCU). In 2015, she completed her PhD in tourism at JCU. Her PhD research investigated the role of humour in tourism settings. More specifically she examined in what ways humour influences the tourist experience in making tourists feel comfortable, connected and more mindful.

Jenny H. Panchal is a Senior Lecturer in the College of Law, Business and Governance at James Cook University (Townsville, Australia). She received the Australian Leadership Award (ALA) Scholarship which funded her PhD in Tourism at JCU. She was also an NZAID Scholarship Awardee which enabled her to obtain her Masters in Tourism Management from Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand. At JCU, she's been involved in teaching tourism, events management and other management subjects in the undergraduate and postgraduate levels in Singapore and Australia, both internally and externally. Dr Panchal's research interests broadly include tourist behaviour related to specific forms of tourism (e.g. wellness and spa tourism, boutique hotels, perceptions of poverty), positive psychology, and are notably focused on the Asian context. Her involvement in Southeast Asian research includes linkages to the ASEAN Tourism Research Association (ATRA) as the Deputy Secretary.

Philip L. Pearce was the Foundation Professor of Tourism and a Distinguished Professor at James Cook University, Australia. He wrote and edited 18 tourism books and has around 300 publications. His longstanding interests were studies in tourist behaviour and experience. He was well known for his work on travel motivation, and approaches to tourists' experience as well as special topics including humour stemming from positive psychology. He worked with his PhD students and international colleagues using a variety of methods and approaches. Most studies were done in settings in Asia, Australia and Europe.

Justvna Pilarska holds a PhD in Social Sciences. She joined the Faculty of Historical and Pedagogical Sciences at the University of Wroclaw in 2012 as an Assistant Professor at the Department of Intercultural Education and Social Support Research, Institute of Pedagogy, where she teaches methodology of social research, contemporary European culture, the Balkans in the 20th and 21st centuries, as well as a number of other subjects. Although she works broadly in intercultural pedagogy, she has published articles in anthropology, sociology, urban pedagogy and cross-cultural education, thus much of her work crosses disciplinary boundaries. Her research interests lie at the intersection of Bosnian cultural diversity, religious syncretism in Japan, multiculturalism and methodology of social research, including indigenous methodologies.

Josephine Pryce is an Associate Professor at James Cook University, Australia. She is a scholar of Organisational Behaviour with a keen interest in 'the nature of work' and research methodologies. She came to academia with a strong industry background having worked for Australia Post and the hotel industry, the latter in North Queensland. During that time, she developed a strong appreciation of the challenges faced by workers, employers and organisations in service industries. Her PhD extended understanding of service predispositions, human relations in the workplace, and organisational culture. Josephine seeks to enrich her perspectives through research that leads to better understanding of the lives of people in communities and the world, especially in relation to their working lives. She is also keenly interested in paradigms, ontologies, epistemologies and how these inform methodological approaches.

Ambrozio Correa de Queiroz Neto, PhD, is Associate Professor in Tourism Management at the Department of Tourism, Centro Federal de Educação Tecnológica Celso Suckow da Fonseca - CEFET-RJ in Brazil. His research interests focus on tourism destination management, destination competitiveness, tourism planning and SCUBA diving tourism.

Noel Scott, PhD, is Adjunct Professor of Tourism Management, in the Sustainable Research Centre, University of Sunshine Coast, Queensland, Australia. His research interests include the study of tourism experiences, and destination management and marketing. He is a frequent speaker at international academic and industry conferences. He has over 300 academic articles published including 16 books. He has supervised 23 doctoral students to successful completion of their theses. He is on the Editorial Board of 10 journals, a member of the International Association of China Tourism Scholars and a Fellow of the Council for Australasian Tourism and Hospitality Education. Prior to starting his academic career in 2001, Dr Scott worked as a senior manager in a variety of businesses including as Manager of Research and Strategic Services at Tourism and Events Queensland.

Oscar Vorobjovas-Pinta is a leading expert on LGBTQI+ communities in the context of leisure, hospitality and tourism. His research interests are the sociology of tourism, tourist behaviour and LGBTIQ+ tourism. Dr Vorobjovas-Pinta explores LGBTIQ+ travellers as neo-tribes, who come together from disparate walks of life but are united through shared sentiment, rituals and symbols. He has a broad interest and industry experience in innovative tourism research, and has been involved in a number of projects focusing on resilience, and on technology enabled advanced tracking of visitors to Tasmania and Sydney, New South Wales. These projects have each been built on extensive stakeholder and industry engagement.

Sue Williamson is a Senior Lecturer in Human Resource Management at the University of New South Wales, Canberra. She specialises in two main areas of research – gender equality in the workplace, and public sector human resources and industrial relations. She is currently examining how public sector organisations can create and sustain gender equality, and inclusive cultures. Sue was chief investigator, leading a consortium of researchers to examine how middle managers are progressing gender equality, funded by the Australia and New Zealand School of Government. Sue has published widely on this topic and also shares her findings with industry partners and the community.