It has been said that the journey of a thousand miles begins with a single step. And such is the case with this book. When we first stepped into the field of immersion education we found ourselves surrounded by generous and knowledgeable scholars who welcomed us and have offered mentoring guideposts along the way. We would like to especially recognize Merrill Swain who has served as CARLA's Immersion Projects External Advisor for many years. Her professional insights, field expertise and authentic communication style have greatly influenced the CARLA Immersion Projects and this publication from the outset.

Donna Christian and Fred Genesee are among the very few scholars that bring a deep understanding of and commitment to the various branches of immersion education addressed in this volume. We turned to them to situate this volume within the broader field of dual language education. We so appreciate that Donna accepted our invitation to write the foreword. In addition to contributing an introductory chapter, Fred led us to two Canadian scholars who were able to offer a chapter representing the indigenous immersion perspective, and for that connection we are grateful. Dick Tucker and Deborah Dubiner graciously agreed to write the synthesis chapter, which involved a very short turn-around time after digesting the entire manuscript. It is an honor to have one of the researchers from the French immersion pilot program in St Lambert, Quebec, weighing in with historical perspective. We'd also like to thank our colleagues, Siv Björklund, Michele de Courcy and Ann Snow for reading and reviewing the final manuscript for the publishers.

A number of individuals impacted the organization and shaping of the volume. We are grateful to Merrill Swain, Kathy Lindholm-Leary and Mimi Met for providing thoughtful feedback on the book prospectus. The series editors, Colin Baker and Nancy Hornberger, offered exceptional guidance and vision. We benefited tremendously from their wisdom and the questions they challenged us to consider after reading the first draft. The book is much stronger as a result of their time, attentiveness and scholarship.

We are also deeply indebted to each of our contributing authors, who carefully responded to feedback and suggestions on earlier drafts of their chapters. We genuinely appreciated contributors' patience and prompt replies throughout the editing process. Most importantly, we gratefully acknowledge their willingness to support the vision that grounds this edited volume, that is, the importance of bringing together research carried out in various immersion settings so that the field as a whole might benefit from a shared knowledge base while remaining mindful of the need for certain context-specific adaptations.

It has been such a pleasure to work with the staff at Multilingual Matters. From our initial interaction with Michael Grover to ongoing support from Tommi Grover, to our work with the editorial staff including Marjukka Grover, Ken Hall, Anne Gray and others, our experience has been so very positive and productive.

Finally, we are grateful for the enduring support and encouragement from those family members and friends who are nearest and dearest to us, Alissa, Brendan, Ryan and Connor Fortune, Bill Pilicer and Mike Lind. Thanks for your patience with those late nights, a less-than-fabulous meal program, and for supporting those much-needed chunks of time away that allowed us to devote the focused energy required to bring this volume to completion.
