

Acknowledgements

This project has developed over many years and has involved the help and encouragement of many people: the teachers and students at three London secondary schools, my own university teachers and supervisors, my colleagues, friends and family.

To the staff and students at the three schools, I am indebted. Throughout this book their names have been changed, but during the production process participants have come to recognize their assigned pseudonyms and in some cases even complained about them. I am particularly grateful to Noreen, Irene and Unal, heads of EAL at each of the three schools. I hope I have done them justice in the trust they showed me during my visits to their schools.

The University of Pennsylvania, its past and present staff and students have played an important part in improving my understanding of linguistic and social processes. I would like to thank Cathrine Berg, Kristine Billmyer, Cathy Doughty, Fred Erickson, John Lucy, Alison Mackey, Ellen Sylvester-Skilton and Nessa Wolfson. I am particularly grateful to Tere Pica and Euan Reid who supported me with ideas and encouragement during this research. I owe a very great debt indeed to Nancy Hornberger for her teachings, research and supervision. She has been an inspiration, not only to me, but to many many others.

My colleagues have made many insightful comments during the life of this research in direct and indirect ways. I would like to thank Sophie Arkoudis, Jo Arthur, Richard Barwell, Arvind Bhatt, Jill Bourne, Harry Daniels, Chris Davies, Sheena Gardner, Valerie Hey, Constant Leung, Deirdre Martin, Marilyn Martin-Jones, Janet Maybin, Brahm Norwich, Ben Rampton, Hugh South and Karin Tusting. Adrian Blackledge patiently read a draft of earlier work and provided helpful and insightful feedback. I would also like to thank Peter Martin and Stephanie Taylor for their critical engagement with my ideas and for their friendship.

My thanks to my family: my dad, the late Douglas Creese, and my brother Billy and sister Joanna. To my mum, Barbara Creese, I am ever indebted. She is, and always will be, the tall woman in my life. My final and biggest debt of gratitude and thanks are for Ida and Nathan.

I would like to thank all the staff at Multilingual Matters for their guidance and good humour.
