Acknowledgments

It is an honour to belong to the community of feminist scholars reading and writing Canadian women's and gender history. Working on this volume has given us the opportunity to collaborate with some of the women who inspired us to become historians and who taught us that knowing the past strengthens feminist activism. It's given us the chance to have new conversations about feminism and history with friends who were there with us in grad school and at the early stages of our careers. And we have continued to learn from the emerging scholars whose work as PhD students excited us when we first met them at conferences. To support future feminist historians, we are donating our royalties to the CCWH-CCHF Marta Danylewycz Memorial Fund, which supports a scholarship for doctoral students working on women's and gender history from a feminist perspective.

Our first thank you is to the contributors, whose professionalism, collegiality, and dedication to the project made our jobs that much easier. Mike Schubert gave us permission to use the beautiful work of his late wife, Joane Cardinal Schubert, an award-winning Kainaiwa artist. We live and work on the homelands of the Niitsitapi (the Siksika, Piikani, and Kainai), the Îyârhe Nakoda, and Tsuut'ina Nations. The Métis Nation of Alberta, Region III also have strong relationships to these territories. It was important for us to acknowledge our respect for and indebtedness to these nations with the work of an Indigenous artist from this land. Cardinal Shubert's artistic practice engaged with Indigenous sovereignty, politics, history, and the environment. She also mentored emerging Indigenous artists in Alberta and Canada. For us, Monarch Resting symbolizes not only the potential for transformation but also the connectedness of all things – land and spirit, past and present, individual and community.

viii Acknowledgments

We would also like to thank Len Husband, our acquisitions editor at University of Toronto Press, and the Studies in Gender and History series editors, Franca Iacovetta and Karen Dubinsky, who encouraged us and believed in and supported this project from the beginning. Christine Robertson, the managing editor at UTP, was a great help and managed to keep us on schedule throughout the final stages. Siusan Moffat is responsible for the index; we extend our thanks for her timely assistance.

Mount Royal University's Deans of Arts, Jeffrey Keshen and Jennifer Pettit, and the University of Calgary Dean of Arts, Richard Sigurdson, provided funding for our 2014 workshop in Ottawa and assisted with the book's production costs. We thank them for their support of feminist scholarship.

A lot of our work happened at a Ramsay dining room and Martin L'Heureux made sure we were fed and watered on these writing and production days. He also helped us work through tricky translations in Baillargeon's chapter. He's probably learned more about feminist historiography than he wanted to. But Nancy likes to think that this informs his efforts to make spaces to ensure that women are heard and thrive in his male-dominated profession.

Working on collaborative projects can make or break a friendship. We are happy to report that theoretical debates, difficult conversations, and celebrations at various stages of production have made ours stronger.
