Acknowledgments

This monograph was made possible by the strong institutional support that I received from the University of Melbourne. I would like to acknowledge the generous assistance of the Faculty of Arts in particular, in the form of both research funding and study leave. I am also grateful to my head of school, Professor Lesley Stirling, for her support and collegiality.

Dr Meribah Rose has been an invaluable help to me at all stages of this project. I wish to sincerely thank her for all her wonderful work both as an astute reader and as an excellent copy editor. I also thank her for the translations she has done of all the quotes in Spanish. She, Professor John Hajek, and I wrote a conference paper on food and fascism in Italy and Spain, and I am grateful to both of them for this intellectually enriching exchange.

I am obliged to Professor Bob Davidson, Mark Thompson, and the production team at the University of Toronto Press. It has been a pleasure to work with such a professional and highly skilled publication team.

I would like to express my appreciation to colleagues and friends from the School of Languages and Linguistics at the University of Melbourne – in particular to Heather Benbow, who has supported this project through her treasured friendship, good humour, and sharp intellect. Many members of the school have joined me in collaborative research and teaching in food-related subjects, and I thank them for their enthusiasm and commitment to the ever-growing area of food studies. In writing this book, I have also benefited greatly from very rewarding exchanges with undergraduate students. I thank the 2016, 2018, and 2019 students of "Cooking Up the Nation."

My international colleagues are a constant source of inspiration, and I am grateful for both their friendship and their outstanding scholarship in the area of Spanish cultural studies and Hispanic food studies. Particular mention goes to Eugenia Afinoguénova, Jo Labanyi, Rebecca Ingram, Suzanne Dunai, Sandie Holguin, Carolyn Nadeau, Rosi Song, Leigh Mercer, and Maria Paz Moreno. Thanks so much for being so welcoming of your colleague from the far-flung Antipodes!

I greatly appreciate Christine Arkinstall for being so supportive of my research over the last two decades. The undergraduate course I took with her on Spanish feminism at the University of Auckland, NZ, ignited my passion for scholarly research, and her research continues to inspire my work.

My most heartfelt thanks to Rosa Maria Martinez Conde and Miguel Angel Bernabe and their families and friends for welcoming me, and more recently Irene, into their homes on the countless occasions I have been to Spain since my undergraduate days. Spain presents an integration of food and culture so seamless that the majority of occasions in Spain involve a meal or the sharing of food, and I am immensely lucky to have been included in their family meals. Rosa and Miguel have been a great source of support for nearly three decades! When, during my post-graduate studies, my father died, it was their care and encouragement that gave me the strength to finish my master's thesis with the necessary grades to obtain a doctoral scholarship.

Bernice Anderson was also a great source of support during this time, and I am so pleased to have her as an aunt. As well as welcoming me into her house for some months when my father and her beloved brother died, she took it upon herself to make sure my thesis – which I was writing in the midst of intense grief – was up to scratch. This involved her going off on her own accord to study up on nineteenth-century Spain's notoriously complicated political system to make sure I hadn't made any errors. True to form, she made some much-needed corrections!

I also want to acknowledge my dear sister, Francene Anderson. She is such a beloved aunt for my children, and I thank her from the bottom of my heart for everything she does for all of us. Although Granddad Ted is not here with us in person, she does everything with them that he would have done.

Finally, my wonderful children – Irene, Vincent, and Jeremy – deserve a special mention for bringing me such happiness. I dedicate this book to them.
