

Acknowledgments

---

We would like to thank our authors, whose enthusiasm and professionalism have sustained this project since its initiation. Our profound admiration for Cervantes and avid engagement with early modern Spanish theatre are shared passions that have united us along this path. All our colleagues have approached the theme of Cervantine theatricality according to their own particular theoretical interests and expertise to create a whole that is greater than the sum of its parts.

Our immense gratitude goes to Suzanne Rancourt of the University of Toronto Press, whose initial encouragement and ongoing guidance have made the publication process so gratifying. We also wish to thank Simon Coll for his scrupulous and timely copy-editing.

We are grateful to Rice University for a Scholarly and Creative Works Subvention, and to its School of Humanities for its generous financial support for the publication of this volume.

This page intentionally left blank