

Acknowledgments

The book that follows deals with a particular medieval manifestation of the fiction of the solitary author, a fiction that still remains with us today. But like most books, this one could not have been written without the labour and support of many people. I give my heartfelt thanks to all those who have made this work possible and made it better. Whatever failings remain are mine alone.

Thank you to my teachers, whose guidance continues to shape all the work that I do. Rolena Adorno taught me to write with precision and exemplifies the kind of scholar and teacher I strive to be; I am grateful to call her both mentor and friend. I remember with gratitude María Rosa Menocal, whose clarity of vision and voice have, I hope, led me to find a voice of my own. Alastair Minnis has been a key interlocutor, enriching my work with his insights on medieval authorship. And Irene Zaderenko gave me both the knowledge and tools to be a medievalist and the confidence to apply to graduate school.

Fellow juanmanuelista Mario Cossío Olavide has been an unfailing source of intellectual exchange and bibliographic recommendations, and he and Delfine Michaud are generous hosts and friends. I am thankful to Olivier Biaggini for reading the entire manuscript in draft and giving incisive comments. Many thanks to Riley Magane for her invaluable assistance with the research and writing of the third chapter, and to BU's Undergraduate Research Opportunities Program for supporting our collaboration. Jonathan Burgoyne, Megan Cook, Irit Kleiman, Deeana Copeland Klepper, Stephanie Nelson, and Joe Stadolnik have engaged with my work on Juan Manuel in myriad ways over the years, and Alani Hicks-Bartlett, Ross Karlan, and Peter Mahoney gave perceptive feedback on chapters in draft. The anonymous readers invested significant time and effort to help sharpen my argument and clarify its impact.

I'm thankful for the continuing support and camaraderie of my colleagues in Colby College's Spanish Department and Boston University's Department of Romance Studies. The Premodern Scholars of Maine provided a convivial atmosphere in which to share my work in progress. The students in my graduate seminar on Juan Manuel – Wiktorja Bryzys, Gonzalo Carretero Martínez, Tijana Čupić, José Dominicci-Buzó, and José Quispe – approached the texts with enthusiasm and fresh insights. Dean Allbritton, ever the community builder, brought me into the fold of a writing group whose members – Mary Kate Donovan, Leslie Harkema, Catalina Iannone, Gabrielle Miller, Martin Repinecz, Evelyn Scaramella, Amaury Sosa, Wan Tang, Sarah Thomas, and Nicholas Wolters – kept me motivated and offered sage advice. Brett White, an instant and steadfast friend, inspired me with her own wonderful book, and has never failed to answer my questions and assuage my doubts.

I wish to thank the programs and institutions that have supported this project at various stages. A grant from the Program for Cultural Cooperation supported a life-changing research trip to Madrid in 2012 to study the manuscripts of Juan Manuel's works in person, and a Humanities Grant for Research and Travel from Colby College enabled me to return to several Spanish libraries and archives in 2015. A Beinecke Rare Book and Manuscript Library Research Fellowship provided access to rare materials and time to write. Generous awards from the Boston University Center for the Humanities and the Medieval Academy of America have enabled the book's publication.

I acknowledge with gratitude and respect the librarians and archivists who have made this work possible. The staff of the Biblioteca Nacional de España, Beinecke Rare Book and Manuscript Library, Real Academia de la Historia, and Real Biblioteca del Monasterio de El Escorial provided essential information and access to manuscripts. Juan Ignacio Pérez Giménez at the Archivo de la Catedral de Valencia offered a wealth of archival support, and both he and María José Ferrer Echávarri at the Biblioteca de la Universidad de Oviedo facilitated access to images.

Laura Portwood-Stacer's Book Proposal Accelerator guided me through the proposal phase and helped me see my project as a publishable book. I have since benefited greatly from the editorial expertise of Suzanne Rancourt, Mary Lui, Emily Reiner, and their colleagues at the University of Toronto Press.

I am grateful for the support of my family, who have waited patiently for this book for as long as it took. Karen Giaquinto, practically a sister, saw me through the ups and downs of this project's early years. My siblings, Maria, Lynda, and Sal, have a special talent for cheering me on and keeping me humble.

To my husband Aidan, thank you for hashing out ideas about medieval authorship with me on our neighbourhood walks, and for your limitless reserves of curiosity and patience.

I dedicate this book to the memory of my parents, Salvatore and Teresa P. Savo, who taught me, each in their own way, the immense value of an education.
