Many outstanding scholars helped me learn about the people, history, politics, religions, and economics of the Middle East. At the American University of Beirut, I was fortunate to work with Nabih Faris, Malcolm Kerr (on sabbatical from the University of California, Los Angeles), Yusif Ibish, Nicola Ziadeh, and Mahmoud Zayid. At Oxford University, I was able to delve broadly into Middle East issues with Albert Hourani, Roger Owen, E. E. Evans-Pritchard, and Peter Lienhardt. In addition, as a student and later with the University of Manchester (UK), the Ford Foundation, and American Near East Refugee Aid (ANERA), I lived and traveled extensively in the region. During these years, I visited most of the lands that Saladin brought under his rule.

I especially wish to thank my colleagues who took the time and effort to read the manuscript at various stages of its development: Max Gross, Ted Gorton, Edmund Ghareeb, and Jenab Tutunji. Their comments, suggestions, and insights contributed positively to the final version of my biography of Saladin. Paula McNicholas provided invaluable editorial advice, which I utilized to improve the text. Naturally, I take sole responsibility for the manuscript.

I also wish to express my gratitude to George Kiraz and his colleagues at Gorgias Press for their help in the preparation and publication of the book. They were always thoughtful, professional, and efficient. Similarly, I acknowledge David Herbick for his skillful preparation of the excellent maps that are essential to and accompany the text.

Lastly, I am deeply grateful to Annie, my wife, for her continual support. She has indulged my life-long interest in the Middle East and always encouraged me as I researched and wrote about Saladin's life and times.
