

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This project is a revised version of my doctoral dissertation written under the supervision of Professor Ed Greenstein at Bar-Ilan University, where I studied from 2011–16. I thank Professor Greenstein for his leadership and instruction during my studies, but mostly for his unparalleled example of civility and kindness in academia. While at Bar-Ilan University, I was privileged to receive the Presidential Scholarship, which greatly assisted with the financial responsibilities associated with studying and residing with my family in Israel for five years. Thus, I express my sincere gratitude to the leadership of Bar-Ilan University for their generosity to me during the years in which this monograph originated. Several professors were particularly supportive of my academic endeavors and pragmatically facilitated my academic and vocational goals during my studies in Israel. I note my heartfelt gratitude to Ellie Assis, Noga Ayali Darshan, Nili Samet, and Leeor Gottlieb, who were my teachers at Bar-Ilan University, as well as Shamir Yona of Ben Gurion University of the Negev, who continues to serve as a mentor and friend.

Several other friends supported my family and me in a variety of ways throughout the writing of this monograph. During the portion that was developed in Israel, Sarah Schwartz, Adi Marilli, Omer Minka, Tami Oron, and Nava Cohen were tremendously helpful colleagues, whose kindness transcended the university setting and extended to the companionship of their families and the hospitality of their homes. Dan Sered, R.J. Runowski, and Jose Luis Quintana have demonstrated unwavering support of my academic and personal goals and have heartwarmingly encouraged our family time and again over the years. Various organizations provided tangible support for my family and me throughout my academic adventure. I am particularly grateful to Calvary Chapel of Philadelphia, and the leadership of Pastor Joe Focht, for supporting our family's trek in academia. The congregants at All Nations Congregation, Petah Tikvah were my friends, co-laborers, and confidants while completing the first phase of this project.

I would like to express my appreciation to Dr. Yael Landman for accepting the project and her initial work with the manuscript. Thanks to Dr. Melonie Schmierer-Lee for her work on the final stages of the manuscript and to Gorgias Press for producing a comely book. A special word of gratitude is due to Mrs. Catherine Merrifield who read the entire manuscript (some sections more than once) and saved me from many errors in my writing. I assume responsibility for any shortcomings that might remain in the book.

I am particularly thankful for my family's resolute backing throughout the years in which I have been working on this book. My mother, Chelo Hernández, has repeatedly kissed her grandchildren goodbye so that her son could pursue education on a different continent, or professional opportunities in a faraway state. Having children of my own, I do not brush aside the anguish of watching loved ones move away, irrespective of the reason. Still, my mother has been proud and supportive of me, and for this, I am grateful. My sister, Julie Young, and her husband, Jeremy, have supported our family for years behind the scenes, which has played a major role in the completion of projects like this one. I am likewise grateful for the inspiration of our children, Yair and Yael, who have been routinely forbearing at times in which abba has intensely focused on writing projects that have always been significantly less consequential than was spending time with them. This project has quite literally endured for the entirety of their lives, during which my wife, Gabby—to whom I am beholden—sacrificially, yet cheerfully, cared for the family as I was occasionally rendered inoperative by the ingenious rhetoric of the poetry of Job.

The more I have engaged with scholarship on the book of Job, the more I have realized that the most skillful readers of the book are the self-aware interpreters who undertake the assignment with a degree of reverence for the task. Humility demands that mere mortals refrain from offering sovereign positions on the interpretation of Job but, rather, engage in an age-old conversation with past and contemporary voices that have labored with the sometimes-enigmatic book. Hopefully, this monograph will be a modest contribution to the complex discussion of Job, a book that is of way too high an order for any of us to fully decipher on our own.
