ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Any anthology represents the combined efforts of both its editors and its contributors; the wheel cannot turn properly without all of its spokes. We were fortunate to have a group of diverse writers who were not only enthusiastic and diligent, but who were often playful as well. Many had a personal connection with the Pan narrative at some point in their histories, a few as participants in productions during their younger days. The resulting interdisciplinary volume, from our earliest discussions of it, to holding the finished product in our hands, was an enjoyable enterprise. We hope that these essays shed some light on one of the most popular and enduring children's narrative ever conceived. We would like to express our appreciation to the staff at Rutgers University Press, who make the sometimes rocky process of publishing as easy as possible. In particular, we wish to thank Leslie Mitchner, who green-lighted and guided the book, Rachel Friedman who never left the red telephone, Rick Delaney, who edited it with such sharp eyes, Marilyn Campbell and Anne Hegeman who saw it through production, and Nancy Wolff who provided the index.

ABK ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I was warned by my colleagues, with varying degrees of cynicism and sarcasm, that editing a book—much less an interdisciplinary collection of essays—was enough to make anyone crazy. Apparently I lucked out, because this was almost as fun as a weekend in Neverland. I would like to thank Les Friedman for his kindness, patience, and sense of humor as we navigated the lagoon of coediting. I must thank the students in my Research Methods class from the spring of 2007 who got over their horror at being forced to do serious work on a children's book and produced smart and interesting responses to Peter Pan. My colleagues in History, Justice Studies, and Gender Studies at CUNY John Jay College have also been exceptional sounding boards and very supportive of this interdisciplinary adventure. My mother, Rae-Ellen Kavey, deserves all credit for reading me Peter Pan when I was tiny and for kindly listening to her bizarre academic child. Finally, I would like to thank Andrea Woodner, who has prompted me to think better and more clearly about Peter Pan, epistemology, and the ties between memory and belief. "I do believe in fairies."

LDF ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

In the interest of full disclosure, I must admit that this anthology was not my idea; the impetus for the volume came from Allison, and I owe her a debt of gratitude for the fairy dust that sparked such an exhilarating project. My thanks to her for gently but persistently prodding me out of my comfort zone and into Neverland. At Hobart and William Smith Colleges, I am fortunate to have a supportive group of colleagues and administrators. Specifically, I am indebted to Teresa Amott, Provost, for supporting my work both financially and intellectually. As always during this process, I had the encouragement and patience of family and friends, including my parents, Eugene and Eva Friedman, and my children, Rachel and Marc Friedman. I owe a special, and continued debt to my friend, Delia Temes, and my wife, Rae-Ellen Kavey, both of whom offered valuable suggestions and insights as the anthology took shape.
