

Acknowledgments

For starting me on the journey that led me to write this book, I owe a debt of gratitude to Tom Dublin of Binghamton University. When he asked me to coordinate the research and writing of Delaware suffragist biographies for the planned Online Biographical Dictionary of the Woman Suffrage Movement in the United States, he sent an intriguing breeze my way. Before long, my little boat's sails were filling with the questions and ideas that led this book to its eventual destination. The work of the students, teachers, librarians, curators, and writers who contributed to the online biographical project provided crucial ballast; I thank them all. I also wish to acknowledge the valuable research assistance provided by the staffs of local institutions, particularly: the Delaware Historical Society; the Delaware Public Archives; the University of Delaware Library, Museums and Press; the University of Delaware Library's Special Collections Department; and the University of Delaware Archives.

Grateful thanks are due to Rebecca Johnson Melvin in the University of Delaware Library Special Collections for alerting me to sources I might not otherwise have consulted, and for guiding me as we created an exhibit based on those (and other) materials. In addition, archivists and librarians at the Library of Congress and the Belmont-Paul Women's Equality National Monument, home of the National Woman's Party, provided helpful guidance and speedy responses to my inquiries. Connie Cooper deserves her own shout-out for willingly tutoring me in all aspects of Delaware history, answering my questions, sharing her research, and taking time for tea and conversation at Sinclair's Café. My colleague Carol E. Hoffecker wrote the first major scholarly article on Delaware's suffrage struggle. I remain indebted to her for both her scholarship and her mentorship. Invited lectures at the University of Delaware and the Delaware Public Archives provided opportunities to share my research and hone my arguments. At the University of Delaware Press, Julia Oestreich edited the manuscript and guided it through the publication process with efficiency and precision. Her enthusiasm for the project from start to finish buoyed my spirits. Two readers for the press provided helpful suggestions.

As always, my family and friends smoothed the research and writing process through their care and support. My friend and colleague Margaret Stetz, with her keen interest in the book and her passion for feminist scholarship, has been an inspiration throughout. Bridget Boylan looked over the manuscript with an astute reader's eye, and Peter Kolchin read every word, offering reliably trenchant suggestions. He and the rest of our extended clan were consistent sources of encouragement, ideas, distraction, laughter, and love.

Votes for Delaware Women

