Acknowledgments

Working on the first draft of this book was, for better or for worse, largely a solitary experience. A number of people subsequently gave me valuable help in improving the manuscript; I especially thank Annette Baier, Neil Cooper, Chris Fraser, Liang Zhiping, Wang Xiaoying, and Wu Fen. For intellectual conversations, in person or by writing, that have contributed in more or less direct ways to making this a better book, I am indebted to Daniel A. Bell, Nicholas Bunnin, Joseph Chan, Raymond Geuss, David Konstan, Christopher New, Dan Robins, Joan Scott, Michael Walzer, Wan Junren, Wang Yunping, Xu Ming, and Xu Yinong. My deepest thanks go to Raymond Geuss for the most wonderful support, help, and encouragement imaginable.

I am grateful for fellowships awarded by several institutions for projects that were, or turned out to be, related to work on this book: the National Humanities Center, Research Triangle Park, North Carolina; the Virginia Foundation for the Humanities and Public Policy; and the School of Social Science, Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton.

In two chapters of the book I draw on material that has appeared before, in History of Philosophy Quarterly 15 (1998) and Political Theory 33 (2005). I thank North American Philosophical Publications and Sage Publications, respectively, for permission to do so.

I owe special gratitude to two anonymous referees for Harvard University Press. One of them, Thomas Pogge, has shed his anonymity, and it is a pleasure to thank him for extremely enlightening and probing comments. The other referee, equally deserving of special mention, captured the drift of my argument with such an amazing combination of sympathetic understanding and critical detachment that I have gratefully taken the liberty of borrowing locutions from the referee's report to improve the formulation of a number of my ideas. I also thank the philosophy and law syndics of Harvard University Press for helpful suggestions.

Lindsay Waters has been a superb editor, guiding me through crucial stages of the process with his distinctive combination of scholarly discernment and wealth of editorial experience. Susan Abel and Thomas Wheatland, friendly and wonderfully professional, have been a pleasure to work with, as has Amanda Heller, whose care and judicious, light touches as copyeditor have made a real difference.
