

Acknowledgments

Books are collaborative endeavors, proving that “colleague” and “friend” are synonymous. This project has been no exception. At the very beginning, Amy Lang saw possibilities in the topic and encouraged its pursuit. At Vanderbilt University, I am greatly indebted to my colleague Teresa Goddu, who has been consistently encouraging and critical, reading drafts and offering advice at every point. Late in the project, in addition, Thadious Davis proposed a valuable direction of inquiry and particular references. I thank her for the timeliest of advice. Helen Vendler’s suggestion of a Robinson Jeffers poem and Ann Cook’s festive gift of the ceramic “flower power” planter (Figure 13) are much appreciated also.

This project has benefited substantially from institutional research support. Vanderbilt University provided sabbatical leave and funds for research, including travel to the Newberry Library, the National Archives, and the Hot Springs (Arkansas) National Park, where archivist Sharon Shugart generously aided my research. I am indebted, too, to the staffs of the Jean and Alexander Heard Library and of the Historical Collections of the Eskind Biomedical Library of Vanderbilt University, especially Mary Telo and James Thweatt, for their help. I also much appreciate the research assistance of Jill Anderson and Alison Piepmeier.

The project was enriched by my month-long stay at the Rockefeller Foundation Study Center at Bellagio, Italy, whose staff provided ideal conditions for writing. I especially thank Gianna Celli, assistant director of the center, for her warmth and support. The scholars in residence that fall of 1997 offered numerous helpful suggestions, and I am particularly grateful to Alix Kates Shulman and Brenda Silver. Along the way, faculty and graduate students have posed important questions in response to presentations I have made of various portions of this work, and I thank the Departments of English at Brandeis University, Case Western Reserve University, and the California Institute of Technology in addition to the American Studies Association of Israel and the Dibner Institute of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. A portion of Chapter 3 appeared in "Pittsburgh at Yellowstone: Old Faithful and the Pulse of Industrial America," American Literary History 9, no. 3 (Fall 1997): 522–541, and I appreciate the permission of Oxford University Press to reprint it here in revised form.

Finally, outside reviewers have contributed much to this undertaking, which is the better for their efforts. I also wish to express my appreciation to Lindsay Waters, Kim Steere, and Elizabeth Gilbert of Harvard University Press, who have guided the project at every step.

EMBODIMENT OF A NATION

