

CONTENTS

Preface	xi
1 A Civilization in Crisis	1
A New “Paideuma” and the Birth of the Humanities—The Causes of the Crisis—The Reform of Christian Culture—The Humanist Movement Takes Shape
2 Virtue Politics	31
Obedience and Legitimacy—Virtue Politics—Classical Sources of Virtue Politics—How Not to Reform a Republic—Eloquence and the “Virtuous Environment”—A New Way of Thinking about Politics
3 What Was a Republic in the Renaissance?	63
The Renaissance Concept of the State—What Is the Meaning of Respublica in the Italian Renaissance?— Respublica Romana — Respublica in Medieval Scholasticism—Leonardo Bruni and Respublica in the Fifteenth Century— Respublica : An Idealization of Ancient Government—Is Civic Humanism Found Only in Non-monarchical Republics?
4 Taming the Tyrant	103
Tyranny in Greek Philosophy—Cicero’s Understanding of Caesar’s Tyranny as Violation of Ius —Bartolus of Sassoferato and Baldo degli Ubaldi—Petrarch on Living with Tyrants—Was Caesar a Tyrant? Petrarch, Salutati, Guarino, Poggio—Poggio on Tyranny and the “Problem of Counsel”—Pier Candido Decembrio on the Virtues of a Tyrant—The Recovery of Ancient Greek Sources on Tyranny
5 The Triumph of Virtue: Petrarch’s Political Thought	153
Petrarch’s Politics of Virtue—Cola di Rienzo: Populism and Its Limits—Petrarch’s New Realism
6 Should a Good Man Participate in a Corrupt Government?	174
Petrarch on the Solitary Life
The De Vita Solitaria : An Ideal of Private Life for Literary Men—The Defense of Private Life—Seneca versus Augustine: Political Obligation and Political Autonomy

7	Boccaccio on the Perils of Wealth and Status	192
	Boccaccio's Political Experience—The Need to Reform the Materia Prima of Politics: Human Nature—Virtue, Education, and Tyranny—Boccaccio and the Humanist Debate about Private Wealth and Economic Injustice—Boccaccio and Virtue Politics
8	Leonardo Bruni and the Virtuous Hegemon	218
	Why Florence Deserves to Be the Heir of Rome: The Panegyric of the City of Florence —Political Liberty as a Source of Virtue—The Etruscan Model: Leadership in a Federal Republic—Dante and Bruni on the Legitimation of Empire
9	War and Military Service in the Virtuous Republic	238
	Late Medieval Civic Knighthood and the Context of Leonardo Bruni's De Militia —Excursus: The Humanists and Partisan Politics—Bruni's De Militia : A New Interpretation—Excursus on the “Virtuous Environment”: Donatello and the Representation of Classical Military Virtue—Do Humanist Teachings on Warfare Anticipate Machiavelli?—Virtue in Military Life—Roberto Valturio on the Education of Soldiers
10	A Mirror for Statesmen: Leonardo Bruni's History of the Florentine People	271
	History as Political Theory—Virtue in the Service of the Republic's Glory—The Primacy of the Popolo and the Suppression of Factions—Moderation in Politics as the Key to Social Concord
11	Biondo Flavio: What Made the Romans Great	289
	The Roma Triumphans and the Revival of Roman Civilization—What Was the Respubblica Romana for Biondo?—Biondo's Virtue Politics, Republicanism, and the Greatness of Rome—A Cosmopolitan Papalist
12	Cyriac of Ancona on Democracy and Empire	305
	A Short History of the Term Democratia —Cyriac of Ancona's Attempted Rehabilitation of the Term Democratia —Cyriac the Caesarian
13	Leon Battista Alberti on Corrupt Princes and Virtuous Oligarchs	318
	Why Virtue Is Incompatible with Court Life—Who Should Constitute the Political Elite?—The De Iciarchia and the Regime of Virtuous “House-Princes”

14	George of Trebizond on Cosmopolitanism and Liberty	335
	George's Attack on Nativism and Defense of Cosmopolitanism— A Renaissance Libertarian?
15	Francesco Filelfo and the Spartan Republic	351
	Filelfo and the Recovery of the Spartan Tradition—Filelfo and Humanist Adaptations of the Myth of Sparta
16	Greek Constitutional Theory in the Quattrocento	364
	The "Second Wave" of Greek Constitutional Theory—Legitimation and the Republican Regime—Francesco Patrizi on Republican Constitutions—Delegitimation: Bruni and the Chivalric Ideal— Substitution: Platonizing Venice's Constitution—Mario Salamonio Compares Florence to Athens
17	Francesco Patrizi and Humanist Absolutism	386
	The Recovery of Ancient Greek Monarchical Theory—Patrizi and His Project in the De Regno —Virtuous Royal Legitimacy and Humanist Absolutism—The Argument for Monarchy—Can Monarchical Power Be Virtuous?—How the King May Become Virtuous
18	Machiavelli: Reviving the Military Republic	423
	The Calamità d'Italia —Machiavelli and Humanist Literary Culture— Machiavelli's Political Education and The Art of War —Why Princes and Republics Should Follow the Ancient Way of Warfare
19	Machiavelli: From Virtue to Virtù	449
	Machiavelli's Prince and Renaissance Conceptions of Tyranny—The Machiavellian Revolution in Political Thought—Machiavelli's Virtù
20	Two Cures for Hyperpartisanship: Bruni versus Machiavelli	476
	Two Competing Narratives of Florentine History—The Ordinances of Justice—Walter of Brienne and the Instability of Tyranny—The Restoration of Popular Institutions in 1343—Two Cures for Hyperpartisanship
21	Conclusion: Ex Oriente Lux	495
	Appendices	517
	A. Petrarch on Political Obligations: De vita solitaria 2.9.19–22 (Chapter 6)	517

X · CONTENTS

B. Speech of Rinaldo Gianfigliazzi before the Florentine Priors, 1399, from Leonardo Bruni's History of the Florentine People , 11.75–78 (Chapter 10)	521
C. Renaissance Editions, Translations, and Compendia of Francesco Patrizi of Siena's Political Works (Chapter 16)	525
Notes	529
Note on Sources and Translations—Abbreviations
Bibliography	651
Texts and Translations—Secondary Literature
Acknowledgments	699
Index of Manuscripts and Archival Documents	705
General Index	707