

CONTENTS

BOOK I

To the Reader	3
I. By Divers Means a like End is attained	5
II. Of Sadness	10
III. Our Feelings extend themselves beyond our Perceptions	15
IV. How the Soul vents its Emotions on False Objects when True Ones are lacking	24
V. Whether the Commandant of a Besieged Stronghold should go forth to parley	28
VI. The Hour of Parley is a Dangerous Time	32
VII. That our Actions should be judged by our Intention	35
VIII. Of Idleness	38
IX. Of Liars	40
X. Of Readiness or Unreadiness of Speech	47
XI. Of Prognostications	50
XII. Of Steadiness	56
XIII. The Ceremony at Interviews of Kings	59
XIV. That the Savour of Goods and Ills depends in large part on the Idea that we have of them	61
XV. Unreasonable Persistence in the Defence of a Stronghold is punished	88
XVI. Of the Punishment of Cowardice	90
XVII. A Proceeding of some Ambassadors	92
XVIII. Of Fear	96
XIX. That our Fortune must not be judged of until after Death.	100
XX. That to think as a Philosopher is to learn to die	104
XXI. Of the Power of the Imagination	127
XXII. One Man's Profit is another's Loss	141
XXIII. Of Custom, and the Inadvisability of changing an Established Law	143
XXIV. Different Results of the same Counsel	165

XXV.	Of Pedantry	177
XXVI.	Of the Education of Children	193
XXVII.	It is Unwisdom to leave to our Knowledge the Decision of what is True and what is False.	237
XXVIII.	Of Friendship	243
XXIX.	Nine-and-twenty Sonnets of Etienne de la Boëtie	260
XXX.	Of Moderation	262
XXXI.	Of Cannibals	268
XXXII.	That it is with Sobriety that we should under- take to judge of the Divine Decrees	286
XXXIII.	Of avoiding Pleasures at the Cost of Life	290
XXXIV.	That Fortune is often met with in the Train of Reason	292
XXXV.	Of a Defect in our Administration of Cities.	296
XXXVI.	Of the Custom of wearing Clothes	298
XXXVII.	Of the Younger Cato	303
XXXVIII.	How we Weep and Laugh at one and the same Thing	309
XXXIX.	Of Solitude	313
XL.	Reflection concerning Cicero	329
XLI.	Of not giving away One's Glory	336
XLII.	Of the Inequality between us	340
XLIII.	Of Sumptuary Laws	352
XLIV.	Of Sleep	356
XLV.	Of the Battle of Dreux	359
XLVI.	Of Names	361
XLVII.	Of the Uncertainty of our Judgement	368
XLVIII.	Of Steeds	376
XLIX.	Of Ancient Customs	388