

CONTENTS

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION	3
I. THE POLISH QUESTION. — General character and phases through which it has passed. Its historical importance. II. CAUSES OF THE DECLINE OF POLAND. — Decline primarily due to political causes — to the unfortunate historic evolution of the Polish constitution. The Ständestaat. Analogies to, and differences from, the constitutional development of other countries. The conquest of the supreme power by the szlachta: their triumph over the Crown and over the other classes of society. Their failure to organize their power properly. Strength of the decentralizing tendencies. Impotence of the Diet as against the Dietines. Imperative mandates. The Liberum Veto. Confederations. Unparalleled freedom and privileges of the szlachta. Ideology of the szlachta-state. Arrested development and a century of stagnation. III. POLAND IN THE MIDDLE OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. — Area and population. Lack of national and religious unity. Condition of the peasantry, the towns, the magnates, and the poorer szlachta. Disorganization and paralysis of the government. Military impotence. Summary of the results of 'golden liberty.' IV. THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE POLISH QUESTION AS AN INTERNATIONAL PROBLEM. — History of Poland's international relations from the First Great Northern War to the accession of Catherine II. Policy of France towards Poland; of Austria; of Prussia; of Russia. V. THE FIRST PARTITION. — Catherine II, character and aims. Stanislas Poniatowski raised to the throne. His character. Troubles precipitated by Catherine's aggressive policy. An international crisis terminated by a partition. This transaction not a triumph of Prussia over Russia. Results of the First Partition.

CHAPTER I

THE STATE OF POLAND AFTER THE FIRST PARTITION. THE BEGINNING OF NATIONAL REVIVAL	56
I. POLITICAL CONDITIONS. — General character of the period. The Russian rule. The Permanent Council. Financial reforms. The Education Commission. Inadequacy of the political reforms of this period. II. SIGNS OF NATIONAL REVIVAL. — Marked economic progress. Intellectual awakening. III. THE REFORM MOVEMENT. — Growth of reforming ideas. Moral condition of Polish society. Confused and perplexing character of a period of transition.

CHAPTER II

THE AUSTRO-RUSSIAN ALLIANCE AND THE OUTBREAK OF THE RUSSO-TURKISH WAR	64
I. THE POLICY OF THE NEIGHBORING POWERS TOWARDS POLAND AFTER THE FIRST PARTITION. — Catherine provisionally committed to the status quo . Unsatisfied ambitions of Prussia. Austria averse to further partitions. Precarious situation of the Republic.
II. RELATIONS OF THE THREE EASTERN POWERS WITH ONE ANOTHER. — War of the Bavarian Succession. Potemkin's hints to Prussia about a new partition. Formation of the Austro-Russian alliance. Projects of the Imperial Courts with respect to Turkey, Prussia, Poland. Idea of an Austro-Prussian rapprochement.
III. OUTBREAK OF THE ORIENTAL WAR. — Trip of the Empress to the Crimea. The Turks declare war.

CHAPTER III

THE DESIGNS OF PRUSSIA	75
I. THE HERTZBERG PLAN. — The problem before Prussia. Hertzberg's 'universal panacea.' His diplomatic campaign, and the formation of the Triple Alliance.
II. COUNTER MEASURES OF THE IMPERIAL COURTS. — Alarm at Vienna. The Russian declaration to Austria guaranteeing the integrity of Poland. Further projects for thwarting the ambitions of Prussia.

CHAPTER IV

THE PLAN FOR A RUSSO-POLISH ALLIANCE	82
I. STANISLAS' PLAN FOR AN ALLIANCE WITH RUSSIA. — Aims and policy of the King of Poland. His proposals to Catherine in 1787. Offers of the magnates to her.
II. THE SECRET DESIGNS OF POTEMKIN. — Position and aims of the Tauric Prince. The 'Kingdom of Dacia.' Intrigues with the Polish magnates. Scheme for a Cossack and peasant uprising in the Ukraine.
III. CATHERINE'S PLANS FOR THE ALLIANCE. — The Empress' atti- tude towards the King and Potemkin. Her draft for the treaty of alliance. Disillusionment and humble submission of the King.
IV. THE COLLAPSE OF THE PLAN BEFORE THE OPPOSITION OF PRUS- SIA. — Explosion of indignation at Berlin. Revolution in Prussian policy. The Empress withdraws the project, but Prussia is not ap- peased.

CHAPTER V

THE OVERTHROW OF RUSSIAN RULE IN POLAND 92

I. PUBLIC OPINION ON THE EVE OF THE GREAT DIET. — The impression produced by the Oriental war in Poland. The King's program, and that of the 'Patriots.'

II. THE DIET EFFECTS A REVOLUTION. — The meeting of the Four Years' Diet. Parties. The Prussian declaration. Triumph of the Patriotic and anti-Russian party. Overthrow of every external sign of Russian control.

III. ATTITUDE OF PRUSSIA TOWARDS THE REVOLUTION AT WARSAW. — Tortuous and uncertain character of Prussian policy. Original aim of the Prussian intervention in Poland. Desire to provoke a Counter-confederation. Attempts to get the Diet dissolved. Embarrassment produced at Berlin by the victory of the 'Prussian party' at Warsaw.

IV. ATTITUDE OF THE IMPERIAL COURTS. — Austria counsels prudence and moderation at St. Petersburg. Catherine's wrath against Prussia. Decision to postpone her revenge. Potemkin's visit to the capital. Talk of a new partition of Poland. The danger averted.

CHAPTER VI

THE PRUSSO-POLISH ALLIANCE 112

I. GENERAL REFLECTIONS ON THIS ALLIANCE.

II. ORIGIN OF THE PROJECT. — Desire of the Polish 'Patriots' for an alliance with England and Prussia. Proposals sent to Berlin in July, 1789. Crisis in the general policy of Prussia. Hertzberg counsels immediate action. The King decides for a great offensive enterprise in the following year. The Prusso-Turkish alliance.

III. REALIZATION OF THE PROJECT. — The alliance agreed upon. Stanislas' efforts to prevent it. Hertzberg's demand for Dantzic and Thorn. Consternation at Warsaw. The demand withdrawn. Conclusion of the alliance. Its aim and significance.

CHAPTER VII

REICHENBACH 128

I. LEOPOLD II. — His accession; character and aims. Overtures to Prussia. Pitt's proposal of the status quo ante as the basis for a general pacification. Frederick William persuaded to enter into negotiations.

II. THE AUSTRO-PRUSSIAN NEGOTIATION. — Exchange of letters and memorials. Dilatory tactics of both sides.

III. AUSTRIAN APPEALS TO RUSSIA. — Kaunitz's demands at St. Petersburg. The Empress and Potemkin absorbed in other affairs. Potemkin's plan for the seizure of the Ukraine. Austria abandons hope of aid from Russia. Decision to treat with Prussia.

IV. THE CONVENTION OF REICHENBACH. — The respective situations of Austria and Prussia on the eve of the congress. The negotiation between Hertzberg and Spielmann. Frederick William's abrupt change of front. Leopold accepts the strict status quo principle. Signature of the Convention.

V. RESULTS. — Significance of the dénouement at Reichenbach for Austria; for Prussia; for Poland.

CHAPTER VIII

CATHERINA CONSTANS INVICTA 153

I. THE PROBLEM OF IMPOSING THE STATUS QUO UPON RUSSIA. — Catherine's terms for her peace with the Turks. Her animosity against "the new dictators of Europe." Rude repulse administered to the dictators. Diplomacy exhausted.

II. DELIBERATIONS AT BERLIN AND LONDON. — Double and triple-faced policy of Prussia. Frederick William's overtures to Austria for a reconciliation and joint action against the French Revolution. His overtures to Russia. Reluctance of the Prussians to go to war over the question of Oczakow. Pitt's 'Federative System.' His plans with regard to Poland. Under Ewart's influence, he decides to coerce Russia. Preliminary reconnoissance.

III. DIPLOMATIC BATTLES. — Efforts of both sides to win allies. Attitude of the Bourbon Courts, Denmark, Sweden. Zeal of the Poles for a war with Russia; dampened by the equivocal attitude of Prussia. Pitt's intervention at Warsaw. The Dantzic question. Attitude of Austria. Bischoffwerder's first mission to Vienna.

IV. THE CRISIS. — England and Prussia decide upon the most vigorous measures. Catherine's firmness put to the supreme test. Potemkin at St. Petersburg: leads the Empress into one false step towards Prussia; again advocates a partition of Poland. Catherine's preparations to resist all her enemies.

V. THE BACKDOWN OF THE TRIPLE ALLIANCE. — Attitude of the British public towards Russia and the Eastern Question. Storm of opposition to Pitt's policy in Parliament and in the country. Pitt's decision to abandon the principle of the strict status quo. Prussia joins in the retreat. Fawkener's mission to St. Petersburg. Complete triumph of the Empress. This outcome unfortunate for Poland.

CHAPTER IX

THE REVOLUTION OF THE THIRD OF MAY AND THE FORMATION OF THE AUSTRO-PRUSSIAN ALLIANCE 192

I. THE THIRD OF MAY. — Delays and difficulties in the way of constitutional reform in Poland. Question of the hereditary succession. The 'conspiracy' of the King and the 'Patriot' leaders. The events of May 3, 1791 at Warsaw. Analysis of the new constitution. Its significance.

II. ATTITUDE OF THE NEIGHBORING POWERS. — Frederick William, against the advice of his ministers, expresses warm approval of the new constitution. Leopold and Kaunitz not informed in advance of the plans of the Polish reformers. They welcome the revolution at Warsaw; and endeavor to persuade Russia to acquiesce in it.

III. THE VIENNA CONVENTION OF JULY 25, 1791. — Leopold II and Lord Elgin. Bischoffwerder's second mission to the Emperor. The crisis in French affairs induces Leopold to accept the Prussian alliance. The conclusion of the preliminary Convention. Indignation of the Prussian ministers. The end of the Oriental crisis. Its results.

CHAPTER X

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE FRENCH AND POLISH QUESTIONS
TO THE DEATH OF LEOPOLD II 217

I. AUSTRIA'S FIRST PROPOSALS FOR A GENERAL CONCERT ON FRENCH AFFAIRS. — The Circular of Padua. Responses of the Powers. The interview at Pillnitz. Temporary lull in French affairs.

II. LEOPOLD'S EFFORT IN BEHALF OF POLAND. — Critical state of the Polish Question. The Austrian program of November. Proposals to Prussia. Supreme effort to induce Russia to agree to the new Polish constitution. Landriani's mission to Dresden.

III. DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN AUSTRIA AND PRUSSIA. — Renewal of the French crisis. Austria driven to resume the plan for a concert and to seek a thorough understanding with Prussia. Frederick William's aggressive policy towards France. Territorial aggrandizement its essential aim. The question of 'indemnities.' His altered attitude towards Poland; and rapprochement with Russia. Austria forced to concessions in the Polish Question. Conclusion of the Austro-Prussian alliance treaty.

IV. FURTHER AGGRAVATION OF THE CRISIS. — Goltz discovers a great secret at St. Petersburg. First signs of Prussia's desire to take the indemnities for an intervention in France at the expense of Poland. Bischoffwerder's third mission to Vienna. Death of Leopold II. His political system already crumbling. His popularity in Poland.

CHAPTER XI

THE OUTBREAK OF WAR IN EAST AND WEST 243

I. RUSSIAN DESIGNS AGAINST POLAND. — Catherine's attitude towards Poland since 1788. Potemkin's schemes. Two rescripts to him. His death.

II. DEVELOPMENT OF THE EMPRESS' PLANS. — Catherine's anger against Austria. The Polish malcontents at Jassy. Bezborodko recommends an understanding with Prussia. First overtures of Russia to the German Powers regarding the overthrow of the new Polish constitution.

III. "THE DEATH-SENTENCE OF POLAND." — Francis II and his advisers. Austria's last effort to save the Polish constitution. Frederick William decides in favor of a new partition. He waits for Russia to make the first proposal.

IV. THE ORIGINS OF THE POLISH-BAVARIAN PROJECT. — Spielmann despairs of saving Poland; and is tempted to revive the project for the Bavarian Exchange. Significant 'conversations' between the diplomats at Vienna. Spielmann's first overtures to Prussia regarding a new partition. Kaunitz still clings to the policy of Leopold II.

V. THE GERMAN POWERS AND THE INTERVENTION IN FRANCE. — Austria's rights to the support of Prussia. Frederick William's conception of the nature of his participation in the war. Lack of a definite and binding agreement on this subject; or with respect to the indemnities.

VI. THE RUSSIAN INTERVENTION IN POLAND. — The Polish malcontents at St. Petersburg. Formation of the Confederation of Targowica. Catherine's final military and diplomatic preparations. Her attitude towards the question of a new partition. The two 'counter-revolutions' in France and Poland. Their interaction upon one another.

CHAPTER XII

THE RUSSIAN RECONQUEST OF POLAND 283

I. POLISH PREPARATIONS FOR RESISTANCE. — State of Poland on the eve of the Russian attack. Energetic but belated measures for national defence. The end of the Four Years' Diet.

II. THE CAMPAIGN OF 1792. Prussia summoned to recognize the casus foederis. Potocki's mission to Berlin. Frederick William refuses aid. Military resources of Poland. The campaign in Lithuania and the Ukraine. Situation at the moment of the cessation of hostilities.

III. THE COLLAPSE OF THE NATIONAL RESISTANCE. — Stanislas in terror. He insists on negotiations. His overtures to the Empress, and her reply. The extraordinary council of July 23. The King goes over to the Confederation of Targowica. Flight of the Patriots. Submission of the army. Poland prostrate.

IV. ATTITUDE OF THE GERMAN POWERS. — Irritation and embarrassment at Berlin and Vienna. Kaunitz's plan to checkmate the Empress. The Austro-Prussian declaration to Russia. Failure of the joint action.

V. THE EMPRESS RENEWS HER ALLIANCES WITH BOTH THE GERMAN POWERS.

CHAPTER XIII

AUSTRIA AND PRUSSIA AGREE UPON A PARTITION 310

I. PRUSSIA TAKES THE INITIATIVE IN PROPOSING A PARTITION. — The conference at Potsdam. Pointed hints to Russia. The secret correspondence between Schulenburg and Spielmann. The Polish-Bavarian plan agreed upon in principle.

II. KAUNITZ'S FRUITLESS OPPOSITION AND RETIREMENT.

III. AUSTRIAN OVERTURES TO RUSSIA. — Razumovski's conversations with Cobenzl and Spielmann. The Polish-Bavarian project formally proposed by Austria at St. Petersburg.

IV. RECIPROCAL ADVANCES BETWEEN RUSSIA AND PRUSSIA. — Catherine's significant overtures on the indemnity question. Prussia replies by revealing her ambitions in Poland.

CHAPTER XIV

AUSTRIA AND PRUSSIA DISAGREE ABOUT THE PARTITION . . . 326

I. THE DEMAND FOR ANSBACH AND BAIREUTH. — The Austrian ministerial conference at Frankfort. The Austro-Prussian conferences at Mainz. First rift in the alliance.

II. AUSTRIA INSISTS UPON HER DEMAND. — Reflections and illusions of Austrian ministers. Encouraging news from St. Petersburg. A new onset upon Prussia.

III. THE PRUSSIAN RESISTANCE STIFFENS. — Exasperation, suspicions, and anxieties of the Prussian ministers. Their decision to seek an understanding first of all with Russia. The demand for the Margraviates definitively rejected. Danger of a Russo-Prussian agreement without the participation of Austria.

IV. PERPLEXITY AND VACILLATION AT VIENNA. — Dissensions in the Austrian ministry. The Emperor decides to take his 'supplement' in Poland. He decides to take it in Alsace instead. Spielmann dispatched to the King of Prussia to negotiate a final settlement of the indemnity question.

CHAPTER XV

THE NOTE OF MERLE 348

- I. THE BEGINNING OF SPIELMANN'S NEGOTIATION. — Military disasters. Spielmann's plan for meeting the new situation.
- II. A MOMENTOUS TURN IN PRUSSIAN POLICY. — Austria's necessity, Prussia's opportunity. The Note of Merle.
- III. A PROVISIONAL AGREEMENT. — Spielmann's fight against the new Prussian principles. Reassuring declarations of the King and Haugwitz. Plan for the forcible sequestration of Bavaria.

CHAPTER XVI

HAUGWITZ'S FINAL NEGOTIATION AT VIENNA 362

- I. DISMAL SITUATION OF AUSTRIA AT THE CLOSE OF 1792.
- II. NEW POLICY OF THE IMPERIAL CABINET. — The resolutions of the ministerial Conference of November 29-30. Unsatisfactory reply to the Note of Merle. Haugwitz assumes his most "peremptory" manner.
- III. A CHAOS OF MISUNDERSTANDINGS. — Conflicting testimony. The dispatches to London. The ostensible and the secret instructions to L. Cobenzl. Haugwitz 'vanquishes every obstacle.' The question as to what concessions he really obtained. Results of the negotiation.

CHAPTER XVII

THE RUSSO-PRUSSIAN PARTITION TREATY 377

- I. CATHERINE APPEARS TO FAVOR A PARTITION. — The evidence at hand as to the Empress' attitude during the early stages of the project. Prussia presses for an immediate agreement. Significant note of Bezborodko.
- II. CATHERINE APPEARS TO BE OPPOSED TO A PARTITION. — The Empress' anger at the fiasco of the allies in France. Her "rules" for the negotiation with Prussia. Other motives for delay. The negotiation at a standstill.
- III. THE DÉNOUEMENT. — The reasons for Catherine's decision to settle the affair at once; and with Prussia alone. Her territorial claims. A hurried negotiation. The treaty concluded.
- IV. THE SECRET CONVENTION OF JANUARY 23, 1793. — The pretext invoked for the Partition. The respective acquisitions. Illusory provisions in favor of Austria. An unsurpassed triumph of Russian diplomacy. Mingled emotions at Berlin.
- V. PRELIMINARY MEASURES FOR EXECUTING THE PARTITION. — The Prussian declaration at Warsaw. Entry of the Prussian troops into Poland. Pitiful spectacle presented by the Confederates of Targowica. Manifestoes of the partitioning Powers.

CHAPTER XVIII

THE ATTITUDE OF AUSTRIA TOWARDS THE PARTITION 398

I. THE COMMUNICATION OF THE CONVENTION AT VIENNA. — Deliberations of the Imperial ministry in January. Growing uneasiness in February. Attacks on the leading ministers. "Indescribable sensation" produced by the Partition Treaty. Fall of Spielmann and Philip Cobenzl.

II. THUGUT'S DÉBUT. — Character of Thugut. Manifold objections of Austria to the Partition Treaty: their justification. Thugut's provisional program. His overtures to the partitioning Powers, and to England. Reflections on his policy.

III. RESULTS OF THUGUT'S FIRST ACTION. — Temper and projects of the Prussian ministry. Lucchesini's note verbale of May 15. Russian reply to Austria. Prussia and the question of the Austrian indemnities. England's reply to Austria.

IV. FURTHER DEVELOPMENT OF THUGUT'S CAMPAIGN. — The search for acquisitions. Thugut's suspicions and miscalculations with regard to Prussia. He relies chiefly upon Russia. Attempts to secure a share in Poland; and to postpone the execution of the Partition.

V. THE LEHRBACH MISSION. — Thugut's plan to "amuse" the Prussians with a dilatory negotiation. Prussian plans to give the negotiation a striking finale. Lehrbach and Lucchesini. The crisis at Grodno. The Prussian note of September 22. Virtual rupture of the Alliance.

VI. FINAL NEGOTIATIONS OF AUSTRIA WITH RUSSIA REGARDING THE SECOND PARTITION.

CHAPTER XIX

THE ATTITUDE OF ENGLAND AND FRANCE TOWARD THE PARTITION 440

I. ENGLAND. — Change in Pitt's foreign policy since 1791. British sympathy for Poland in 1792. England's entry into the war with France, and rapprochement with the Eastern Powers. Pitt expresses his moral reprobation of the Partition, but refuses to go further. Debates in Parliament.

II. FRANCE. — Traditional friendship of France for Poland. Contradictory desire to conciliate Prussia. Foreign policy of the Girondists. Lebrun's scheme for a coalition in Eastern Europe. The First and Second Committees of Public Safety. Collapse of French effort in the East.

CHAPTER XX

THE DIET OF GRODNO AND THE CONSUMMATION OF THE PARTITION 454

I. PREPARATIONS FOR THE DIET. — The state of Poland in 1793. Sievers. The King induced to go to Grodno. The elections. Plans of the Empress.

II. THE RUSSIAN TREATY. — Character of the Grodno Diet. Venality and hypocrisy of the majority. The 'Zealots.' Turbulent scenes and measures of coercion. Polish attempt to separate Russia from Prussia. The treaty with Russia passed under constraint.

III. THE PRUSSIAN TREATY. — Animosity of the Poles and duplicity of the Empress towards Prussia. A dilatory negotiation. Tortures of a Prussian envoy. The journée of September 2nd. Vigorous resolutions at Berlin and change in Sievers' conduct. The 'Dumb Session' of September 23. Conclusion of the treaty.

IV. FINAL LABORS OF THE DIET. — The alliance with Russia. The new constitution. Virtual incorporation of the remains of Poland with Russia. A new storm gathering.

CHAPTER XXI

CONCLUSION 484

I. WITH REGARD TO POLAND. — Decisive importance of the Second Partition. Judgments as to the expediency of the attempt for national independence made by the Four Years' Diet. The problem of 1788. The effort made in the next three years on the whole creditable. The reverse side of the picture. Judgments on the Polish effort of 1792. Adverse extraneous conditions. Material success or failure not the sole standard: the moral value of the work done at that time.

II. WITH REGARD TO PRUSSIA. — Prussian policy constantly one of territorial aggrandizement. Its motives. Apologies for Prussia's conduct towards Poland. Sybel's theses. "Eine That gerechter Nothwehr." Disastrous results of the Partition for Prussia.

III. WITH REGARD TO RUSSIA. — Catherine not averse to the policy of partition, as is generally assumed. The political unification of the Russian race not the determining motive of her policy. Material and moral gains and losses resulting to Russia from the Partition.

IV. BROADER ASPECTS OF THE PARTITION. — Inefficacy of the efforts made by England, France, and Austria on behalf of Poland. General character of international politics in the eighteenth century. What was new in the dismemberments of Poland. The Second Partition the classic example of the moral bankruptcy of the Old Régime.

APPENDICES

I. THE RUSSIAN DECLARATION TO AUSTRIA OF MAY 10/21, 1788, GUARANTEEING THE INTEGRITY OF POLAND . . .	509
II. ON CATHERINE'S ATTITUDE TOWARDS THE PROJECT OF A RUSSO-POLISH ALLIANCE	510
III. ON POTESKIN'S SECRET PLANS	512
IV. ON THE CHANGE IN PRUSSIAN POLICY IN THE SUMMER OF 1789	516
V. OSTERMANN TO ALOPEUS, MARCH 14/25, 1791	519
VI. NOTES ON CHAPTER IX	521
I. ON THE ORIGIN OF BISCHOFFWERDER'S SECOND MISSION TO LEOPOLD.
II. ON THE VIENNA CONVENTION OF JULY 25, 1791.
III. ON BISCHOFFWERDER'S ATTITUDE TOWARDS AN INTERVENTION IN FRANCE.
VII. ON THE AUSTRIAN ATTITUDE TOWARDS THE PLAN FOR THE PERMANENT UNION OF SAXONY AND POLAND . .	524
VIII. ON THE NOTE FROM CATHERINE TO ZUBOV REPORTED BY GOLTZ, FEBRUARY 3, 1792	525
IX. FELIX POTOSKI TO POTESKIN, MAY 14, 1791	527
X. BEZBORODKO TO THE EMPRESS, JANUARY 25/FEBRUARY 5, 1792	528
XI. ON FREDERICK WILLIAM'S ATTITUDE TOWARDS THE PROPOSALS OF AUSTRIA AND RUSSIA IN MARCH, 1792 .	530
XII. DOCUMENTS ILLUSTRATING THE ORIGINS OF THE POLISH-BAVARIAN PROJECT	531
XIII. DOCUMENTS ILLUSTRATING THE EARLIEST DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN RUSSIA AND PRUSSIA REGARDING A NEW PARTITION	534
XIV. ON RAZUMOVSKI'S CONVERSATIONS WITH COBENZL OF JUNE 30 AND JULY 1, 1792, REGARDING THE POLISH-BAVARIAN PLAN	537
XV. ON THE DATE OF SPIELMANN'S PLAN DISCUSSED ON PAGES 351-352	540

XVI. DOCUMENTS ILLUSTRATING HAUGWITZ'S FINAL NEGOTIATION AT VIENNA	546
XVII. NOTES OF THE EMPRESS BELONGING TO THE PAPERS OF THE SECRET CONFERENCES OF OCTOBER 29/NOVEMBER 9 AND NOVEMBER 4/15, 1792.	551
XVIII. RESCRIPTS OF CATHERINE II TO SIEVERS WITH REGARD TO THE NEGOTIATIONS AT THE DIET OF GRODNO . . .	552
BIBLIOGRAPHY	557
INDEX	573

THE SECOND PARTITION OF POLAND

