

Contents

Introduction	1
Literature, Biography, and the Modern “Death of the Author”	2
From the Death of the Author to a Poetics of Everyday Life	13
The Theater of the Self: Myth, Fashion, and Writing	26
1 The Death of the Author:
Stopping Living and Stopping Writing	37
The “Book” and the “Life”: Mallarmé and Rimbaud	38
Theoretical Necrophilia: The Tomb of Mallarmé Revisited	40
Writing and Domestic Sacrifice	49
Black Velvet of Talent, or the Figuration of the Pure Poet	55
The White Butterfly, or the Erotics of Impurity	69
The “Purest Poet”: Myth Making and Mis-Reading	80
Mallarmé’s Embarrassment, or Rimbaud’s Undressing	93
The Violence of Poetics: The Scars of Arthur Rimbaud	97
“La Vraie Vie est absente”	105
Rimbaud and His Doubles	113
2 The Death of the Revolutionary Poet	119
“Revolutionary Poet”: History, Myth, and the Theater of Cruelty	120
“Vladimir Mayakovsky”: Personification and Depersonalization	126
A Portrait of the Artist in a Yellow Blouse: Metaphor and Transgression	137
Suicide as a Literary Fact: “Vladimir Mayakovsky” by Roman Jakobson	148
Poetics of Mistranslation: “Vladimir Mayakovsky” by André Breton	158
Politics of Mistranslation: “Vladimir Mayakovsky” by Louis Aragon	167
The Revolutionary Poet: Oxymoron or Tautology?	181
3 The Death of the Poetess	191
The “Poetess”: Lack, Excess, and Aesthetic Obscenity	192

viii ■ Contents

The Poetess's Self-Defense: Close Reading and Clothes Reading	199
The Death of the Poet: Emigration beyond Gender?	219
Death in the Feminine: The Amazon's Severed Breast	229
Postmortem: Poetess without Quotation Marks	234
Conclusion: The Death of the Critic?	241
Notes	251
Index	283