

About the authors

Claire Edwards is a lecturer in the School of Applied Social Studies, University College Cork, Ireland. Her background is in urban and cultural geography and social policy. Her research interests include: urban regeneration and the effectiveness of urban policy, particularly in terms of its ability to provide benefit for excluded communities; the participation of disabled people in society and the disability rights agenda; and the politics of social research and the relationship between research and policy. She has published widely in urban geography, social policy and environmental planning, including many peer-reviewed journal papers.

Rob Imrie is Professor of Sociology in the Department of Sociology at Goldsmiths University of London, UK. His research interests include disability and design, urban regeneration, and urban policy and politics. He is author and co-author of several books, including Disability and the city (1996, Paul Chapman Publishing), Inclusive design (2001, Routledge), Accessible housing (2006, Routledge) and Architectural design and regulation (2011, Wiley-Blackwell). At present, he is directing a project funded by the European Research Council on the topic of universal design, disability and the designed environment.
