

Notes on contributors

Yehudit Avnir, PhD, is a social worker who has practised in the Jerusalem social services agency. She is Emerita of the Paul Baerwald School of Social Work and Social Welfare at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Israel, where she served as the head of the Field Practice Unit and the Bachelor of Social Work programme. Her professional and research interests are social work agencies, social work education, and social work history.

Kate Bradley is a social historian in the School of Social Policy, Sociology and Social Research at the University of Kent, Canterbury, UK. Her work focuses on the history of social policy between c.1890 and the present day, examining settlement houses, juvenile welfare and justice, youth work and legal advice. She has published two monographs with Manchester University Press: Poverty, Philanthropy and the State: Charities and the Working Classes in London, 1918–79 (2009) and Lawyers for the Poor: Legal Advice, Voluntary Action and Citizenship in England, 1890–1990 (2019).

Francisco Branco holds a PhD in social work, with a specialisation in social policy and social movements. He is Associate Professor at the Universidade Católica Portuguesa, Lisbon, Portugal, where he teaches social work history, social research and social policy, and coordinates the PhD in Social Work. Professor Branco is a member of the Católica Research Centre for Individual, Family and Social Wellbeing at the university and a member of the Board of European Social Work Research Association. His research interests include the development of social work as a profession; social work history; policy practice in social work; and public policies, especially social assistance and social minimum policies.

Jeanette Copperman currently lectures in social work at the Open University, UK. She trained originally as a community development worker and practised in a variety of voluntary sector settings including Waterloo Action Centre before becoming a research and policy worker. She was a founder member of the Women's Mental Health Network and has campaigned and written about women's mental health issues. She is currently researching the history of women's mental health activism in the UK and her research interests include social inclusion, social inequalities within mental health, and women and violence. She has a particular interest in participatory research methods that involve service users.

Rory Crath, MA, PhD, is Assistant Professor at Smith College, Massachusetts, US. The overarching analytical scope of his research programme is a critical examination of the consolidation and mediation of knowledges in governance practices targeting the social lives and health of urban youth, immigrant communities and queer men. He is invested in interrogating how differently raced, classed, gendered and sexually lived lives come to be made meaningful or not, and are contested or accommodated through the exercise of circulating regimes of knowledge. Rory Crath has more than 15 years of community-based experience working in the areas of homelessness, sexual health promotion and anti-poverty mobilisation with queer, racialised, immigrant, two-spirit and transgender youth.

John Gal is full Professor and former Dean at the Paul Baerwald School of Social Work and Social Welfare at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. He heads the welfare policy programme at the Taub Center for Social Policy Studies in Israel. His fields of interest include social policy in Israel and in the Mediterranean region; policy practice in social work; and the history of social work.

Geoffrey A.C. Ginn is an historian at the University of Queensland, Australia, with interests in 19th century social policy and urban history, public history, museums and heritage. His book Culture, Philanthropy and the Poor in Late-Victorian London was published by Routledge in the UK and US in 2017 (paperback edition 2019), following his biography of the English antiquarian, museums pioneer and religious mystic J.S.M. Ward, which appeared in 2012. He is presently working on the intimate politics of the Edwardian 'New Liberals' and the Queensland Atlas of Religion, the latter a major digital humanities project funded by an Australian Research Council Linkage Grant (2019–22).

Stefan Köngeter, Dr. phil. habil., is Professor of Social Work and co-head of the Institute of Social Work and Social Spaces at FHS St. Gallen University of Applied Sciences, Switzerland. His research interests comprise a broad range of topics in social pedagogy, social work and sociology: transnational history of social work, transnationalisation of social welfare, child and youth care, professionalisation of social pedagogy and social work.

Dayana Lau, Dr. phil., studied education and social pedagogy and works as lecturer and research associate at Alice Salomon University, Berlin, and Martin Luther University, Halle, Germany. Her research interests are the relationship of social work and social movements and the history of research, professionalisation and gender studies in social work.

Barbara Levy Simon, Professor Emerita, studied social work at the Graduate School of Social Work and Social Research at Bryn Mawr College near Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, US. She has worked in sexual assault prevention and treatment and in community mental health. She recently retired after 33 years of teaching at the Columbia University School of Social Work, New York, US. Currently, Levy Simon is conducting research for a book on the social and cultural movements that have helped shape over time the profession of social work in a variety of Anglophone countries.

Steven Malies graduated in social work at Birmingham University, UK, in 1979. He worked as a social worker in London local authorities, most recently specialising in adult mental health. For some ten years, he worked for the Open University as an associate lecturer supporting students on practice placements. Since 2000, he has worked as a lecturer in social work for the same university. He is interested in social work history and its evolution in London.

Hugh Shewell, MSW, PhD, is Professor and former Director of the School of Social Work, Carleton University, Ottawa, Canada. In 1967–68, he worked briefly as the Assistant Boys' Club Leader of the Oxford and St. George's Settlement House. He is the great nephew of social reformer Sir Basil Henriques.

Sarah Vicary is Associate Head of School, Nations, in the School of Health, Wellbeing and Social Care, Faculty of Wellbeing, Education and Language Studies of the Open University, where she holds strategic and operation responsibility for all staff delivering qualifications across the UK. She is a qualified registered social worker and has worked primarily in mental health services, including as a frontline practitioner, an approved social worker, manager of a multidisciplinary mental health crisis service and a senior manager for inner-city emergency mental health services. She is widely published in social work and mental health.

Jens Wietschorke studied European ethnology/cultural studies, German literature and philosophy in Tübingen, Vienna and Berlin. He gained a doctorate from Humboldt University in Berlin, Germany (2009) and a habilitation degree and appointment as a private lecturer from the University of Vienna, Austria (2015). He has been Assistant Professor at the Institute for European Ethnology and Cultural Analysis, Ludwig Maximilian University of Munich, Germany, since 2015. From 2016–21, he was Heisenberg Fellow of the German Research Foundation at the University of Vienna. His research interests include urban studies, history of knowledge, the cultural analysis of class relations and social inequality, and the history of social reform movements.