

Acknowledgments

We are grateful to all the people who worked to make this book a reality in the midst of the global COVID-19 pandemic and the various political crises that have shaped the past few years. As scholars, we feel that the crises we face, past and present, demand our attention and prompt us to develop new lenses with which to understand the world and guide meaningful action. We humbly and respectfully hope this book contributes in this regard. We would like to thank Victoria Pittman, Anna Richardson, Shannon Kneis, Bahar Celik Muller, Dawn Preston, and all the wonderful editors and production staff at Bristol University Press for their work, consistent support, and guidance. We would also like to thank our anonymous reviewers who, at various stages, provided invaluable feedback. We owe a special word of appreciation to Max Papadantonakis for his careful proofing and formatting work and to Katie Holstein Mercer and Ian Whalen for their helpful contributions. Finally, as we look to the future of this project, we are grateful for the work of memory scholars and activists of the past who have paved the way for our own modest contributions.
