

Contents

---

Introduction: Our Water Stories	3
1. A Culture of Conservation	25
2. The Limits of the Conservation Ethos	53
3. The Origins of the Conservation Ethos	79
4. Indigenous Water Relationships	105
5. Rethinking Water Relationships in the Arid Southwest	133
Epilogue: The Song of the Water	167
Acknowledgments	169
Appendix A: Research Overview	175
Appendix B: Demographic Information	179
Works Cited	183
Index	195

---

If there is magic on this planet, it is contained in water.

—Loren Eiseley

Water sustains all life. Her songs begin in the tiniest of raindrops, transform to flowing rivers, travel to majestic oceans and thundering clouds and back to earth again. When water is threatened, all living things are threatened.

—Indigenous Declaration on Water, 2001

What happens to water, happens to all of us.

—Vernon Masayesva, former Chairman of the Hopi Tribal Council, Executive Director of Black Mesa Trust

